Reilly, however, maintained that he "voluntarily withdrew" the proposal. "Obviously I had a position that I went in and advocated, and it is not the position I agreed to when I came out," he said. "People have built a cathedral on that point. I think, and come to see many more problems in the competitiveness council than in fact we have experienced."

END RUNS

Ironically, Paley, who was pleased with the result, still has some misgivings about how the President's Council on Competitiveness got the job done. "This is not the way you want to go, because you don't want to turn these things into political power battles devoid of the issue," she said. "We think there is a good, sensible, substantive argument that can and should be made and be understood by the agency. That's the way I would prefer to proceed: to have the agency understand what it is that they have done rather than go back around and [obtain a result based on] who whispers in whose ear.

"It's nice that we got it, but I guess that there may be times when we will be concerned about an organization like the competitiveness council, which nobody knows a whole lot about and nobody knows who does what to whom there. We don't think that you should have to go around the back door to groups that are not out there in the open and who do not function in a substantive area to achieve this kind of objective."

No less controversial than the council's involvement in the recycling issue was its work in setting back another proposal dear to Reilly: his effort to eliminate the pollution that obscures the magnificent vistas around the Grand Canyon. Invoking the clean air laws, Reilly sought a steep reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions from the Navajo Generating Station, a coal-fired power plant 80 miles northeast of the park.

Reilly's original goal was to gain a 90 percent reduction in the plant's sulfur dioxide emissions, but he encountered stiff opposition from within the Administration and from the plant's operators. Another complication: The Interior Department's Bureau of Reclamation owns more than a 20 percent stake in the plant.

D. Michael Rappoport, an associate general manager at the Salt River Project, which operates the generating station, contended that the costs of meeting Reilly's target were astronomical, reaching into the billions of dollars.

"We came to the conclusion that there is no empirical or common-sense basis for imposing those costs on customers for minimal [benefits] that might arise." Rappoport said, "We were concerned fundamentally that EPA was not hearing our concern and was proceeding on a regulatory track that had very significant [monetary] consequences. We began to look for other opportunities to share our concern."

Those opportunities included a stop at the President's Council on Competitiveness. "What the competitiveness council provided was an opportunity to get economic considerations into the equation, which often are overlooked." Rappoport noted. "It provides a very important forum for presenting a point of view that we felt needed to be factored into the equation."

The council ultimately helped to persuade EPA to propose a 70 per cent reduction, although it is also receiving public comments on the more ambitious 90 per cent standard (which would increase the visibility range even more), according to government data.

Hubbard again referred to the council's concern as stemming from a straight cost-benefit analysis, but he pointed out that the proposal includes several options for people to comment on. "I'm certain that administrator Reilly is not uncomfortable with the proposed regulation," he added.

But Doniger said that the 70 per cent standard means there is three times as much pollution. "It's really a question of whether you'll have 10 percent of pollution left or 30 per cent," he said.

The council is sure to draw further fire from environmentalists with its recent announcement that it would be taking a look at the government's Wetlands Delineation Manual, which specifies environmentally sensitive areas that require a permit before they can be developed. In a May 7 press release, the council reaffirmed Bush's commitment to a policy of "no net loss" of wetlands while it promoted such legitimate land use as farming, housing development and construction of roads and airports.

Colton, for one, is pleased by the council's review of the wetlands issue. "It's very useful to have somebody say, 'Let's be concerned about the environment, but let's recognize that you need balance in some of these areas in order to achieve what needs to be done.'" he said. "Some of these [environmentalists] might be upset because they do have the ear of the bureaucracy and have been able to work closely with the EPA. They certainly would be opposed to somebody else entering the picture and trying to facilitate a dialogue that would achieve a balance, but everybody plays the game the best they can."

Indeed, perhaps the smoothest players of all are Hubbard and McIntosh, who have adroitly used the trump cards that Quayle dealt them, to the chagrin of environmentalists.

WHITE HOUSE COMPETITIVENESS COUNCIL PROVOKES SHARP ANGER AMONG DEMOCRATS IN CONGRESS

(By Jeffrey H. Birnbaum)

WASHINGTON.—California Rep. Henry Waxman calls it "sinister." To Massachusetts's Rep. Gerry Studds, it's "Orwellian." And Minnesota Rep. Gerry Sikorski accuses it of nothing short of "treason."

What could possibly trigger such rage from these liberal Democrats? Why, it's the innocently named White House Council on Competitiveness, which is fast emerging as a major flashpoint in the regulatory battles between the Bush administration and Democrats in Congress.

The council, which is made up of highranking administration officials, exists ostensibly to help the administration speak with one voice on issues involving international competitiveness. But Democrats charge that, through its process of reviewing the routine-but-important regulations that enforce new laws, the council is secretly and probably illegally seeking to thwart the intention of those laws—especially the Clean Air Act—to benefit business interests.

"There's no legislative authority for what they're doing," asserts Rep. George Miller, the California Democrat who chairs the House Interior Committee. "It's a serious breach of the separation of powers."

To make their point, the Democrats have staged two lengthy congressional hearings and are planning a series of others; party leaders say they even hope to turn the council into an issue in the 1992 campaign. In addition, environmental groups are gearing up legal challenges to the council's basic authority.

Council aides and congressional Republicans scoff at all the fuss, and defend the group's activities as not only desirable but also almost completely immune from legislative attack. The Democrats' grousing, they add, won't deter it from broadening its influence in coming months on matters that range from civil justice to clean air to telecommunications.

"BROAD-RANGING" MANDATE

"The council's mandate is broad-ranging," says Allan Hubbard, the councils executive director and a top aide to Vice President Quayle, its chairman. "We obviously want to have an impact." (What's more, riling Democrats on such nuts-and-bolts issues as regulation is just what some GOP strategists think the vice president needs to do to dispel his reputation as a lightweight.)

President Bush established the council soon after taking office in 1989. Besides Mr. Quayle, it includes White House Chief of Staff John Sununu, Budget Director Richard Darman, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, Attorney General Dick Thornburgh and Michael Boskin, the chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers.

Last summer, President Bush gave the council its first concrete task, the same one he himself had spearheaded during the Reagan administration: pushing for deregulation. Any new rules that would impose more costs on business than they would generate benefit to the rest of society, he directed, should be held up and revised.

The major test of this mandate came with the enactment last November of the Clean Air Act. The Environmental protection Agency has been obliged to develop hundreds of regulations to implement the act and other related laws, and the Council on Competitiveness quietly became a forum for appeals on any of the rules that were the subject of disputes between the EPA and other agencies.

Among other things, the council has been instrumental—either directly or through informal talks within the executive branch—in blocking a proposal to require recycling at municipal incinerators; putting off a plan to discourage the incineration of lead batteries, a source of toxic pollution; and softening a proposal to improve visibility in the Grand Canyon by sharply reducing sulfur dioxide emissions from a nearby power plant.

POLLUTION ISSUE

The council staff also helped fashion a rule that critics charge would allow big factories and utilities to unleash almost limitless pollution into the air unless a state government objects within seven days. (The EPA disputes the characterization, and says in any event that the rule isn't yet final.)

"The Council on Competitiveness has taken on the task of helping polluters block EPA's efforts to write Clean Air regulations with the unabashed purpose of protecting industry from the cost of regulation," fumes Rep. Waxman, who chairs the House environment subcommittee. Rep. Miller charges that council members "are quietly, secretly meeting with God-knows-who," and refers to the council as "a polluter star chamber."

Republicans rebut the attacks just as angrily, contending that the council's activities are well within the prerogative of the executive branch and shouldn't be subject to congressional meddling. "This is not an evil agency," says Rep. Norman Lent of New York, the senior Republican on the House Energy and Commerce Committee. "This is part and parcel of the executive agency of this government."

Rep. Lent and others say the council has clear authority to review regulations under the terms of Executive Order 12291, which was signed by President Reagan on Feb. 17, 1961. The order gave the White House's Office of Management and Budget, under the direction of the Bush deregulation task force, the authority to review existing and proposed rules. Today, the council's staff works closely with OMB's Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs to screen proposed regulations.

As a legal matter, decisions about regulations still rest with the agency of jurisdiction, and must be justified by the public record that already has been accumulated. But practically speaking, the council exercises considerable clout; though its decisions can be appealed to the president, he generally doesn't overrule them.

OMBUDSMAN ROLE

Council officials dispute that its mission is to act merely as a business ombudsman. They point out that business interests often war with each other, and are sometimes at odds with the council's own main motivation: to create jobs. "We try to get input from all sources," says David McIntosh, the council's deputy staff director. "At the staff level we meet not only with businesses, but also consumers, labor and environmental groups.

In addition to deregulation, the council also is active in developing new legislation. Its backing recently helped Idaho GOP Sen. Steve Symms insert an amendment into the Senate-passed highway bill making it harder for the government to take private property; critics contend the amendment also could frustrate future enforcement of health and antipollution laws. The council also has set as a priority the defeat of an effort by Nevada Democratic Sen. Richard Bryan to toughen auto emission standards.

The council will soon be moving into other realms as well. It is at work on proposals that would make it harder for plaintiffs to collect punitive damages in civil cases, reduce the time it takes for government approval of new drugs, open wetlands for commercial development and deregulate even further the telecommunications business.

All of which will undoubtedly outrage congressional Democrats even more. "Too much of our hard work is being ignored or reversed," charges Rep. Sikorski. "Some is being twisted, and some trashed."

Interagency Memos Reveal White House Influencing EPA Clean-Air Proposals

(By Barbara Rosewicz)

Washington.—Documents to be divulged at a congressional hearing today raise new questions of whether the White House is improperly injecting pro-industry positions into proposed clean-air rules.

Internal government memos reviewed by this newspaper reveal how a June 6 proposal by the Environmental Protection Agency on a top-priority issue for electric utilities ended up highly favorable to the utility industry.

In an unusual regulatory process, White House economists and the Energy Department played a heavy hand in pressuring the EPA to insert provisions that would relax current regulatory practices and could help power plants avoid as much as $5 billion in pollution-control costs.

Even the Justice Department has questioned whether certain components of the proposal are legal, according to a congressional staffer and government employees who have seen a confidential memo from the department.

Although the EPA by law is in charge of drafting rules to carry out the Clean Air Act, objections by career technical and legal staff at the agency were overridden on certain key provisions. In one memo, Energy Department positions that later were included in the proposal were blasted as "hogwash" and "mostly garbage" in margin notes penned by Greg Foote, EPA assistant general counsel.

"In effect, the EPA rule-making process has been hijacked," said Rep. Henry Waxman (D., Calif.), who called Bush administration officials to Capitol Hill today to testify on the legality of the utility proposal. "What we have," he said, "is a shadow government, responsive apparently exclusively to industry, dictating the administration's policy and forcing the EPA to go along with that."

Allegations have surfaced previously that the Bush administration is illegally trying to write into regulation what it couldn't convince Congress to write into the clean-air law. An earlier hearing by Rep. Waxman focused on a proposal for issuing pollution permits to industry.

White House officials claim the Clean Air Act's high cost—at least $25 billion annually to industry by 2005—justifies their unprecedented degree of involvement in drafting even the finest details of new clean-air rules.

In the case of the utility regulation, EPA Assistant Administrator William Rosenberg argued in an interview that Congress had its chance and failed to agree on how to fix what is widely known as the Wepco problem. It was named for a case involving Wisconsin Electric Power Co., a unit of Wisconsin Energy Corp. Mr. Rosenberg said the administration set out to write a regulation to try to accomplish what it couldn't convince Congress to do.

The Wepco rule is high stakes for the electric industry. It was meant to settle a controversy over when the nation's aging power plants must install costly antipollution equipment, now required for new plants, when they do refurbishment projects to replace parts, meet new acid—rain requirements or, more broadly, to extend the lifetime of their plants.

Memos and correspondence show an unusual regulatory process in which Richard Schmalensee, who has since left his job at the White House Council of Economic Advisers, acted as mediator between the Energy Department, which wanted more exemptions for electric plants doing refurbishment, and the EPA, which wanted to limit pollution increases to result from construction work.

The EPA's original draft rule was scorned by Energy Department Deputy Undersecretary Linda Stuntz, who complained in one interagency memo that it wasn't "responsive to the needs of the electric utility industry."

Afterward, Mr. Schmalensee wrote a memo marked urgent to the EPA that also criticized the agency's draft and spelled out steps on "where and how the current draft must be modified."

Conflict over whether the administration unlawfully went too far in trying to instill flexibility for the industry is likely to be the basis for court challenges, unless there are major changes before the Wepco rule becomes final. The Natural Resources Defense Council, an environmental group that often sues over regulations, has mailed out letters to more than 90 utilities warning it thinks key portions of the proposal are illegal.

"There is no question that these changes ignore the spirit and letter of the law," said David Hawkins, a senior attorney with the NRDC and a former EPA regulator.

The administration is ready to defend its proposal. Mr. Rosenberg of the EPA said the proposal includes changes to fix legal problems cited by the Justice Department memo. Privately, however, some government employees contend legality is still a question and the administration's defense on certain issues is weak.

Mr. Rosenberg also argues that the proposal won't increase pollution because of acid-rain provisions and other antipollution laws on the books. "I'm not saying that the administration's proposal reflected everything the EPA wanted. It didn't. But it was the proposal we accepted. I don't think we're surrendering authority."

Quayle Requests Look at Breeden Testimony

(By David S. Broder and Stan Hinden)

Vice President Quayle, responding to a plea for help from a business group, last night asked to review the testimony that the chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission plans to give today endorsing a bill to extend the time in which stockholders can sue corporations for fraud and misrepresentation.

SEC Chairman Richard C. Breeden agreed to send Quayle a copy of the testimony in which he will reaffirm his support for the legislation, sources said. The sources also said Quayle did not ask Breeden to change his views.

The incident is the latest in a series of cases in which Quayle, as chairman of the President's Council on Competitiveness, has intervened on behalf of business on a regulatory issue. As chairman of the SEC, Breeden heads an independent regulatory agency that is not answerable to the Bush administration.

The case became public as a result of a question Quayle was asked following a speech to the American Business Council, made up of chief executives of 100 of the nation's fast-growing companies, at the Willard Intercontinental Hotel.

Marne Obernauer, chief executive of the Devon Group, a Connecticut graphic arts company, asked whether Breeden's support for legislation giving victims of fraud more time to file lawsuits flew in the face of Quayle's effort to reduce corporate litigation expenses.

Quayle said the administration did not have a position on the issue. "I can assure you that the testimony of Mr. Breeden will be obviously very closely examined and we will make sure that this issue is properly ventilated before he testifies tomorrow," Quayle said.

Breeden is scheduled to testify before the Senate securities subcommittee on a bill extending the time for such lawsuits. The bill, introduced by Sen. Richard H. Bryan (D-Nev.), is opposed by a phalanx of business groups, including public accounting firms, securities firms, insurance companies and others.

A Quayle aide said William Kristol, Quayle's chief of staff, called Breeden and was told by the SEC chairman that he had no problem in sending Quayle a copy of the testimony. Meanwhile, it was learned that Kristol told Breeden that Quayle had not taken a stand on the shareholder-suit issue at the meeting.

Breeden said later that he planned to stick to his guns. "We are not taking a new position," Breeden said. He noted that the SEC has long supported an extended time frame for the lawsuits.

"The vice president has expressed a concern about the cost of excessive litigation to the economy," Breeden said. "I share many of those concerns."

Quayle went to the business meeting to pick up support for his civil litigation reform package, the goal of which is to reduce the burden and costs of lawsuits. That cause, which drew praise from the entrepreneurial audience, is part of the agenda of the President's Council on Competitiveness.

With Bush's blessing, the competitiveness council has injected itself into several recent regulatory controversies, including a battle over the definition of wetlands.

The wetlands controversy also provoked some last-minute discussions between Quayle and his aides and Environmental Protection Agency head William K. Reilly over congressional testimony Reilly was about to give.

Congressional critics have complained that the competitiveness council gives business a back-door channel of appeal on regulatory issues, but Quayle has strongly defended its work as a check on excessive bureaucracy.•

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of the Regulatory Review Sunshine Act of 1991. I would like to thank my colleague from Ohio, Senator GLENN, for his outstanding leadership in offering this legislation.

This legislation is about one thing, and one thing only: accountability. Under our present system of Government, Federal agencies within the executive branch exercise broad rulemaking authority within their areas of jurisdiction. As a general matter, the public may participate in these rulemaking proceedings, and Federal agencies normally are accountable for their actions or for their failure to act.

But there is another layer of policymaking that most Americans know little or nothing about. For example, Federal agencies must obtain the approval of the Office of Management and Budget before issuing final rules. This is known as "executive branch regulatory review," and it takes place under the authority of numerous Executive orders as well as statutes such as the Paperwork Reduction Act.

The Office of Management and Budget, the Council on Competitiveness, chaired by Vice President QUAYLE, and other establishments within the executive branch, have wielded substantial power in Federal policymaking. For example, in the area of occupational safety and health, OMB has all too frequently stalled its review to delay or prevent the adoption of protective standards by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, or forced OSHA to weaken standards before issuing them. This sort of interference has a very tangible result: American workers die. They die because they are unprotected from dangerous workplace hazards.

The accountability of those in power is one of the most fundamental hallmarks of our democratic system of Government. The American public often gets mad at the President for things he has done or at the Congress for things we have done. But the American public has no idea of what OMB and other establishments within the administration are doing in the name of "executive branch regulatory review." OMB is completely unaccountable for its actions.

This legislation would force OMB and other little-known power centers within the executive branch into the light. The bill would require disclosure of all oral and written communications between rulemaking agencies and establishments within the executive branch which engage in any form of regulatory review. Communications between the Government and private entities would also be covered by the disclosure provisions.

I should note that the Comprehensive Occupational Safety and Health Reform Act, which Senator KENNEDY and I introduced this past summer, would address this issue in the context of OSHA regulations. But we need broader reform, and this legislation is the vehicle to that reform. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important bill.

• Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, it's been over 10 years since then-President Reagan issued Executive Order 12291, which dramatically changed the rulemaking process in the executive branch. Prior to that Executive order, regulatory review by an office of the President was conducted on only an ad hoc basis. With the advent of 12291, however, for the first time there was a formalized process for every proposed rule to be reviewed by the Executive Office of the President.

From the time that Executive order was issued, a number of us in Congress have been working to get the OMB review process out into the open. We have had proposed legislation—some of which, by the way, has even passed the Senate at various times—but none of which has been enacted into law.

In 1986 we were able to reach an agreement with the then-Administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs [OIRA], Wendy Gramm, to adopt a number of specific disclosure procedures to increase public awareness of and participation in OIRA's review process. That 1986 memorandum was only supposed to be a beginning toward the development of strong public disclosure procedures. Unfortunately, it has turned out for the past 5 years to be an end as well.

That 1986 agreement was made with the understanding that OIRA was the principal reviewer of rules for the Executive Office of the President. Although the Vice President's Regulatory Relief Task Force was also in existence at that time, it was viewed by many of us involved in the development of that agreement as more of an appellate body for reviewing rules. Rules would be referred to the task force if there was strong interagency disagreement that couldn't be resolved through OIRA.

Now we have been hearing about the work of the Competitiveness Council, which is supposed to be President Bush's substitute for the Regulatory Relief Task Force, but it seems much more than that. Instead of just resolving interagency disputes over proposed rules, the Competitiveness Council appears to play a much more active and regular role in the review process. It appears that the Council on its own selects the rulemakings in which it wants to participate and it apparently has invited the public to contact it about any rulemaking.

By its own admission and as a result of congressional investigation, we know that the Competitiveness Council has had a direct impact on a number of significant rules. Yet the work of the Competitiveness Council is not covered by even the minimum disclosure requirements of the 1986 agreement.

So we have an additional problem now. Not only do we have disclosure procedures for OMB which are inadequate and were only to be a starting point, we have another player in the regulatory review process for which we're starting from scratch in terms of public disclosure. And what's more, we in Congress haven't even been able to get all the documents we have requested on the work of the Competitiveness Council, much less make appropriate documents available to the public.

Mr. President, with the arrival of the Competitiveness Council, I feel we're almost back to square one on the issue of public disclosure, and I, along with Senator GLENN and other cosponsors of this legislation, am not happy with or willing to stay at square one on an issue of such importance to our administrative process.

So we are introducing this bill today to establish basic but essential public disclosure procedures for any Federal entity established by the President to conduct regulatory review. This would cover both the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs and the Competitiveness Council. The disclosure we seek is appropriate in light of the significance of the conduct we are attempting to monitor.

If there are regulatory review entities which can dictate the outcome of agency rulemakings, the public needs to be aware of that, so that everyone has the opportunity to have an equal say in the process and to know the reasons for a particular result. Regulatory review should not be the tool of any one segment of our society or any one group of people who happen to know whom to contact and when a review is being conducted.

The regulatory process must be fair and open to everyone. That is the commitment behind the Administrative Procedure Act, and that is what this bill seeks to ensure.●

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the Regulatory Review Sunshine Act of 1991. This bill would apply the basic principles of the Administrative Procedures Act to the regulatory oversight functions now performed by the Office of Management and Budget and other entities of the executive branch.

The Administrative Procedures Act tries to assure that every American has the same opportunity to be informed and to be heard by the departments and agencies that formulate regulations and policies to carry out our laws. It requires that the regulatory agency make its proposed rules and policies known well in advance of their effective date. It requires that the regulatory agency take public comments on significant regulatory actions. And it requires that each of these comments be considered and that a response to each be formulated before a final regulation is put in place. Every American has an equal opportunity to be heard in the process of formulating rules.

When we pass a law to protect the environment or public health or worker safety here in the Congress, the agency that carries out the law is bound by these procedures. The heads of these agencies who are charged with writing the regulations are also confirmed by the Senate and answerable to the Congress in hearings for their actions.

Since the Carter administration, there has been an attempt to centralize the regulatory process to assure that the program of the government is balanced and that costs imposed by regulations are meeting the highest priorities. In the Reagan administration this oversight process was formalized in two Executive orders that assigned the oversight function to the Office of Management and Budget. OMB is to assure that major rules are properly considered and are consistent with the President's program.

In the Bush administration another layer has been added. It is called the Council on Competitiveness. It is run out of the Vice President's office and includes eight members of the Cabinet. When OMB and an agency cannot agree on a rule or policy, it is sent up to this Council on Competitiveness for dispute resolution.

That oversight is important. We need a coordinating agency for the regulatory process. I have no quarrel with the President's desire to coordinate and oversee the action of the many regulatory agencies.

But in some cases I fear this oversight authority has been used to undermine the openness and equal standing that is promised by the Administrative Procedures Act. Outside groups try to use the review process as another route to influence the content of regulations. OMB officials and staff of this new Council on Competitiveness have met with various groups, presumably with some effect on their decisions, while conducting regulatory oversight.

This is troubling to me. Today, there is no assurance in the law that every American will have equal access to the policymakers at OMB and the Council who participate in these review activities. They are not required to put their proposals on the record. They are not required to ask or respond to public comment. They are not required to listen to all sides before making a decision. And they are not officials of the executive branch confirmed by the Senate with an obligation to answer to the Congress when called upon.

Mr. President, there are several events that have triggered this legislation. Two I will mention are the role of the Council on Competitiveness in recycling policy and in wetlands protection. In January of this year, the Council vetoed an EPA rule that would have encouraged recycling in communities that build municipal incinerators. EPA made the proposal that 25 percent of the solid waste in these communities by recycled. EPA took public comment on the proposal, modified the proposal to reflect the comment, and was prepared to go final with the regulation. But the decision made by the head of the Environmental Protection Agency, who is the person that the Senate confirmed to make these policy judgments, was overturned by the Competitiveness Council. The reasons for reversing EPA's decision are not clear. They are not on the record. No one can have any confidence that the decision was made only after hearing all sides on the issue of recycling.

The second example is wetlands policy. The EPA and the Corps of Engineers have been working to develop a manual that defines the lands that are to be protected by section 404 of the Clean Water Act. A group of scientists from the appropriate Federal agencies spent several years in that effort and in 1989, EPA and the corps jointly issued a delineation manual that was to be used to define wetlands and the jurisdiction of the Section 404 Program.

Apparently, the Competitiveness Council is not happy with the manual and has taken it upon itself to rewrite what it had taken scientists years to develop. A revised manual based on the deliberations of the Council has been issued. That manual has been submitted to the public for comment which is not always the case with these decisions that are handed down from above. The comment so far is overwhelmingly negative. Scientists in the field are finding that this manual, written not by the technical experts of the agencies that are charged with protecting our natural resources but by a small regulatory staff at OMB and at the Competitiveness Council, is a disaster. Perhaps one-half of the areas traditionally considered wetlands, including lands within wildlife refuges and national parks, would be removed from section 404 protection if the revised manual becomes final.

We don't know yet how the debate on wetlands will turn out. But we do know from the experience of the recycling rule that the Council on Competitiveness may take the final decision onto itself, may make the decision without public justification and may hide the record of discussions and considerations that led up to the decision.

The Regulatory Review Sunshine Act of 1991 will hopefully restore a balance to the regulatory process. It requires that all contacts between the staff or members of a reviewing entity like the Competitiveness Council and interest group representatives be made public. It also requires that communications with the regulatory agency be put in the public record. Those are important protections that should be supported by all Senators. We need to know the record on which these decisions are based. That is a fundamental principle of American Government.

There is one suggestion that I would make to the author of the bill. The legislation sets a deadline on the review process to assure that it is not used to kill a proposed rule simply by stalling a final action. This deadline can be extended for good cause. That may be appropriate, but I would like an assurance in the legislative language that the period for review can in no way override a deadline for promulgating a rule or making a report that is set in statute or by a court order.

Mr. President, I congratulate Senator GLENN on the introduction of this bill and urge my colleagues to give it careful consideration.

Mr. RIEGLE (for himself, Mr. DIXON, Mr. DODD, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. WIRTH, and Mr. KERREY):

S. 1943. A bill reforming the Resolution Trust Corporation; to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs.

RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION ACT OF 1991

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, today I am introducing, together with Senator DIXON, the Resolution Trust Corporation Reform Act of 1991. Senators DODD, GRAHAM, WIRTH, and BOB KERREY are cosponsors of the measure. This bill will reform the governance of the RTC to make it more accountable to the American public and to the Congress. Right now, there are too many people in charge at the RTC. Consequently, you end up with a situation where no one is really in charge. This bill would end that confusion by streamlining the two-board structure of the RTC and by putting into place an RTC chief executive officer who has the stature to interact with all agencies of government while running the RTC on a day-to-day basis.

We have learned from hearings on the RTC, and from the experiences of our constituents who have dealt with the RTC, that the administration's structure and proposed restructuring can be significantly improved.

For example, we heard from two impartial witnesses in a hearing held by the Consumer and Regulatory Affairs Subcommittee, which is chaired by Senator DIXON, that the RTC's governance structure is cumbersome. One witness, Mr. Dean, a fellow at the National Academy of Public Administration in Washington, DC who has spent over 45 years in continuous work on the setting up of Government agencies, departments, corporations and advising them on their structure and organization stated that:

> I have never seen such a jerry-built * * * unsatisfactory structure as that which now exists for the RTC framework.

Another witness from that same hearing, Dr. Harold Seidman, also from the National Academy of Public Administration, stated that:

> The division of functions among the Oversight Board, the FDIC, and the RTC inevitably causes confusion, generates conflicts, encourages second-guessing, and buck-passing, and makes it impossible to hold any one individual or organization accountable for the effective performance of the important tasks assigned to the RTC.

Additionally, in the same hearing we heard from Mr. G. William Miller, the former Secretary of the Treasury and former Chairman of the Federal Reserve, that reform of the RTC's governance function should be geared toward a one board structure. He testified that:

> So far as oversight is concerned, I do believe that a single board, simplified and clear-cut can perform well all of the oversight functions that are needed.

We also have heard considerable private sector criticisms of the operations of the RTC. For example, in a hearing held by the Senate Banking Committee on October 24, 1991, a principal of Gencom interests stated that:

> In the marketplace, the recurrent criticism of the RTC is leveled at its changing policies, slow response times, long closing delays, and very onerous contract terms.

Moreover, earlier this year we heard testimony from Mr. Anthony M. Frank, the Postmaster General who previously had served as the chairman and CEO of First Nationwide Bank, that we need to have one individual to run the RTC's operations. Specifically, in his testimony on April 9, 1991, he indicated that on the matter of how the RTC should be organized:

> My theme * * * still is, that this enormous asset disposition problem needs to be administered by a highly capable individual—a czar if you will, with relatively unfettered authority. That czar would assume risks, make decisions, and take actions that a government bureaucracy inherently cannot and will not take, but which are commonplace at the top of honorable, well-run private businesses.

This testimony reiterates what I and many other Members have heard time and time again of the problems with the operations and structure of the RTC. It's time to improve the RTC's performance. This bill would streamline the governance of the RTC. That streamlining combined with the management skills of the RTC CEO will help the RTC run more efficiently. Additionally, other reforms provided by the legislation will make the RTC more accountable and responsive to the American public and Congress.

Nowhere in the private sector or in the Government is there anything like the governance structure that is now in place at the RTC. The bill's chief reform in that area is to eliminate the current two-board governance of the RTC and substitute just one board to govern the affairs of the RTC. The RTC's current two-board structure has impeded the ability of the RTC to move in a sustained and coherent fashion. Generally, two heads may be better than one but certainly not when they are on the same body.

Implementation of this bill will not throw the RTC off track. The field personnel will not be replaced. Offices will not be shut down. Information and expertise will not be lost.

In that regard, Dr. Seidman testified that:

> The change in the board structure would have really no effect whatsoever on the conduct of (the) provision of services in the field. * * * We hope that there would be improvements, but it certainly would not cause any delays or changes.

What will be gained from this legislation I believe is better direction from the governing members of the RTC as well as an active CEO with the appropriate tools to tackle the very large challenges that loom ahead for the RTC.

Attached is a copy of the bill, which I ask unanimous consent be included in the RECORD. I look forward to working with the administration and all members of the committee on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation which will both refinance and improve the operations of the RTC.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

• Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, for some time I have been very concerned about the progress of the Resolution Trust Corporation. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Consumer and Regulatory Affairs, I have become more and more alarmed that the RTC is not operating efficiently. I am equally distressed over the RTC's apparent lack of accountability.

In hearings before both the subcommittee and the full Banking Committee, I have listened to testimony from representatives of small businesses, from academics, and from RTC officials. The cumulative effect of these hearings and testimonies is that I am convinced, more than ever, that the administrations handling of the savings and loan debacle has been poorly conceived and inadequately executed. Most of all, I am convinced that the original oversight structure of the RTC was poorly designed by the administration, creating unclear lines of decisionmaking and diffusing needed accountability.

Again, in hearing after hearing, in letter after letter, in town meeting after town meeting, citizens have voiced their concern over the RTC. The horror stories are mind boggling, and sadly, I do not see them diminishing. Two full years after the creation of the RTC, it is still an unwieldy bureaucracy staffed with career bureaucrats who have little understanding of private sector needs. This Senator and other members have listened to the repeated assurances that changes would be made and that goals would be met. Well, I have news that is no news to the many frustrated individuals throughout the country: The assurances keep flooding from the RTC but changes and progress are only trickling out.

Remember, it was the administration that set up the Resolution Trust Corporation; it was the administration that first told us that the bailout would cost the American taxpayers $19 billion, then $40 billion, then $80 billion, and finally $160 billion. Now it is the administration that tells us not to change the structure of the RTC. The administration asked Congress to accept their plan for the RTC, but one look at the escalating cost to the taxpayer, exacerbated by a poorly constructed and poorly run RTC, emphasizes Congress' responsibility to take corrective action.

Last summer, I introduced a bill to create the position of chief executive officer of the RTC. It was my hope that we could find a strong, independent businessperson with proven success in the private sector to turn things around. Equally important was the goal of increased accountability. I wanted one person to make the decisions and one person to be held accountable. I wanted the buck passing and finger pointing to end.

The administration has recently selected a CEO for the RTC and I applaud this action. The creation of an RTC CEO was an important first step; however, it is not enough. There is concern that the present RTC oversight apparatus might be so diffused and so sprawling as to rob this CEO of any potential for success.

Instead of establishing a clear link of responsibility, the authority and accountability for the policies and operations of the RTC are divided between two boards. By law, the oversight board is to be held accountable for the RTC, while exclusive authority for management of the Corporation is vested in the FDIC. The RTC Board is subject to oversight board supervision for some of its functions but not for others. Clearly, this is a confused and inefficient system.

Recently, the administration proposed a plan to modify the existing dual board structure. This was to be accomplished in part by adding new members to each of the two boards and then slightly modifying the power of the oversight board. It is this Senator's opinion that this relatively cosmetic face lift does nothing to seriously repair the flawed features of the RTC's structure.

On October 23, 1991, I chaired a hearing on restructuring the RTC. The testimony was direct and compelling. Dr. Harold Seidman, senior fellow at the National Academy of Public Administration, a nonpartisan organization, stated:

> We do not believe these basic deficiencies in the present structures can be cured by halfway measures and mere tinkering with the membership and functions of the oversight board.

He went on to say:

> The creation of a dual board structure for a U.S. Government corporation is utterly without precedent and cannot be justified as necessary to maintain sound management and protect the public interest.

Mr. Alan Dean, another expert in public administration testified:

> I have never seen such a Jerry-built * * * unsatisfactory structure as that which now exists for the RTC framework.

This Senator has become convinced that oversight by two boards results in unnecessary confusion and conflict. I am determined to give the new RTC CEO, Al Casey, the best possible chance for success. I am a great believer in the power of one qualified individual to effect significant change. I believe Al Casey is an individual who can make changes and put the RTC back on the right track, but we must be sure that his hands are not tied. Mr. Dean additionally stated:

> To pretend that a confused multi-board structure will be a help to Mr. Casey is simply not the case * * * I think any objective observer would note, there's absolutely no reason for these two boards, nor would it be difficult for Congress to provide for their elimination.

Mr. President, today I join with Senator RIEGLE in introducing S. 1943, a bill that calls for a single streamlined Board of Directors chaired by the Chief Executive Officer of the Resolution Trust Corporation.

I believe this is one more crucial step in insuring that we clean up the clean-up. As I have said before, I do not believe that all of the RTC's problems will be instantly solved; they will not. I do believe that a strong CEO, serving as Chairperson to a streamlined Board, can begin to take action to solve the bureaucratic nightmares which have plagued the RTC.•

• Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to join the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee, Senator RIEGLE, and others in introducing the Resolution Trust Corporation Reform Act of 1991.

The RTC Reform Act will streamline the RTC's management. At the outset, I realize it is difficult for people to instinctively understand the need for doing this. Management theory, after all, is a dry subject that is usually the province of business school academicians.

The fact is that the Resolution Trust Corporation was created in 1989 to clean up the remains of the savings and loan debacle. The RTC is charged with closing down failed thrifts and selling off their assets, all at the least possible cost to taxpayers.

Mr. President, RTC restructuring is important because cleaning up the thrift debacle may cost every man, woman, and child in America as much as $1,000 each before all is said and done. That translates into a total of more than $250 billion. And that is money that could be much better spent on health care, or housing, or education, or on any of a thousand and one other pressing needs.

The more disorganized the RTC is, the higher the ultimate cost is going to be. The more cumbersome the RTC's management structure is, the harder it will be to get the job done and to put this disaster behind us.

Mr. President, there is no question about it. The RTC is disorganized. The two-Board structure that is supposed to be running things makes even the most complicated Rube Goldberg contraption look simple by comparison. Decisions aren't made. Simple questions take months to get answered. Accountability is divided, and the truth is, no one's in charge. And for every day that the problems persist, the cost to taxpayers rises.

In addition, the chaos at the RTC creates huge headaches for those who try to do business with the agency.

Just today I received a letter from a constituent who has been seeking for months to take possession of a house that he bought at an RTC auction back in June. Three times the RTC has set a date for closing. Three times those dates have gone by the boards because the RTC can't get all its documents together, or hasn't had all the necessary signoffs from its officials, or there has been some other snafu.

Mr. President, it is very cold up in Connecticut this time of year, and my constituent's house is unoccupied because of RTC delays. While papers are shuffled among the RTC offices in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and California, squatters appear to be taking refuge in his house. The utilities cannot be switched on, and as a result the water pipes may burst and the heating system freeze. Dealing with the RTC is turning into a much more expensive proposition than my constituent bargained for.

And this constituent's case is by no means an isolated incident. Rather, it is a prime example of the type of horror story I hear all the time about the RTC. Higher ups can't make decisions because it is never clear who is in charge. Papers are shuffled through an endless series of bureaucratic mazes all across the country. Many buyers just walk away, frustrated. And those who do persist wind up paying through the nose for all their trouble.

Mr. President, the bill we are introducing today would simplify the RTC's structure. Following the example of private corporations, it would establish one board to set broad policies, and one chief executive officer to manage day-to-day operations. This structure is not a panacea and it will not end all the horror stories. But it will clear up much of the confusion that breeds so many bureaucratic snafus.

How is the administration responding to this proposal?

The Treasury Department's so-called RTC restructuring plan begins with the pretzel logic of the current system, and builds in even more bureaucracy. The administration insists it will not allow all the management responsibility to be concentrated in a single board. Instead, it wants to keep the current two-Board structure, and add members to each. That is very odd coming from an administration that rails constantly against inefficiency in Government and the need to streamline the bureaucracy.

Mr. President, I regret to say it, but I am afraid that this is the same type of inflexibility and ignorance of reality that we are seeing from the administration on a host of financial issues. The administration needs to wake up and begin to demonstrate the type of leadership that current problems require, not just on the RTC, but on the credit crunch and other matters.

Yesterday, for example, I voted against the nomination of Bob Clarke to continue as Comptroller of the Currency. It was not out of any animosity toward Mr. Clark. Quite the contrary, I like Bob Clarke, but I felt I had no choice but to send the administration a message to pay attention to the credit crunch in New England.

The truth is that we're being clobbered up there. We've lost 96,000 jobs over the past year in Connecticut alone. Business failures in Connecticut during the first seven months of 1991 were up 220 percent over the same period in 1990. Thousands have exhausted their unemployment benefits. Things haven't been this bad since the Second World War, and people no longer talk about a recession. They talk about a depression.

The credit crunch is making matters much worse. I could tell you story after story of banks cutting off creditworthy borrowers, many of whom have been customers for years. I could tell you about the cases I know of small companies literally being put out of business because once they are cut off, there's nowhere else to turn for credit. And the more businesses that fail, the longer the unemployment lines stretch.

Mr. President, the people of Connecticut and New England need help, and they need it fast. And that is why I was sent down here, not to ignore their problems. Not to paper over their pain with some bad assertions that recovery is just around the corner. But to find ways that Government can play a positive, proactive role in getting our economy moving again.

In this vein, other members of the New England delegation and I have gone to the administration time after time after time. We've met with them. We've had them up to New England for countless visits. We have had a whole series of pleasant meetings and polite conversations, but every time we've tried to get the administration to take some concrete action that could ease people's pain, we've been turned down. On capital infusion. On getting the regulators to be more sympathetic to our economic problems. Each time we've asked for their help, the administration has given us a flat-out "No."

Of course, the administration trots out a whole list of directives it has issued to regulators about the credit crunch. They issued another one today, but if they would only talk to people in New England, they'd understand pretty quickly that the message isn't getting through. On Monday I met with a group of 30 CPA's who represented over 1,000 businesses in Connecticut. They know all too well that there is still a credit crunch in Connecticut, and they speak eloquently about the climate of fear that still grips lenders, even after the raft of Treasury directives.

Mr. President, the administration needs to wake up and see the pain and the suffering and the anger for themselves. They need to demonstrate they care. They need to roll up their sleeves, and find some solutions. I have worked with others in Congress on capital infusion plans, on an innovative stock guarantee proposal for small banks, and on other efforts. And I would love to see the administration join us on some of those efforts.

Mr. President, I want to mention one other issue in this connection. Last year, the distinguished junior senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND] and I pushed through a bill to explore the causes of the thrift crisis. Our idea was to set up a bipartisan panel that would compile a complete account of the many factors which contributed to the biggest financial disaster in the history of humanity.

This panel was created almost a year ago, but it has not yet met, because of a host of bureaucratic delays. I would hope that the administration will make some efforts to cut through the red tape, so that the commission can get underway. It is far past time that America got some answers about the source of the $180 billion hole that the RTC is now trying to fill.

Mr. President, in closing, let me say that I am pleased that negotiations are once again slouching toward production of a banking bill. The administration has worked hard for a bill, and has, I think, demonstrated great realism in recognizing the wisdom of modernizing our financial services industry. My hope is, however, that the administration will soon put the same degree of energy and realism into the RTC restructuring issue, the credit crunch, and the thrift commission.●

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. PELL, and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 1944. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to strengthen the Nation's health promotion and disease prevention activities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

HEALTH PROMOTION AND DISEASE PREVENTION ACT OF 1991

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to improve two of the most neglected aspects of our health care system—health promotion and disease prevention. The Health Promotion and Disease Prevention Act of 1991 emphasizes that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. It capitalizes on the strengths of the current law and further solidifies the Federal-State partnership in promoting health and preventing disease and disability.

Preserving and enhancing the quality of life for all Americans is the overall goal of this legislation and it is particularly timely now. Over three-quarters of our national health care costs are the result of diseases or injuries that are preventable. Nine preventable chronic diseases are responsible for over 50 percent of all deaths in this Nation. Yet, of over $600 billion spent on health care each year, less than 3 percent will be spent on health promotion and disease prevention.

Chronic diseases, such as heart disease and cancer, are responsible for over 1.5 million deaths each year. Seventeen percent of children under the age of 6 may be suffering from lead poisoning. Over 2.3 million victims are hospitalized for injuries each year and over 150,000 deaths result. Twenty to thirty percent of children aged 2 and younger have inadequate immunization. Many of the factors responsible for chronic diseases, disabilities, or deaths are preventable through health promotion and disease prevention activities.

The human costs are accompanied by the staggering economic costs for treatment of these preventable conditions. Cardiovascular disease alone costs the Nation $135 billion annually. Injuries cost $100 billion and cancer costs $70 billion. The lifetime cost of one child with congenital rubella is $354,000, which could have been avoided if the mother had been immunized at a cost of $30. Over 7 million Americans have coronary artery disease. The costs associated with the surgical treatment of this disease averages $30,000 per patient.

The treatment of advanced cervical cancer costs $28,000 for just the first year. The lifetime costs to treat and rehabilitate quadriplegic victims of preventable injury exceed $570,000. We pay billions of dollars a year to treat diseases and illness that could have been prevented.

The effectiveness of preventive health measures has been demonstrated time and again. The control of high blood pressure is one of the most effective measures for reducing death rates from heart disease and stroke. The cost-benefit analysis of lead poisoning prevention suggests that for every dollar invested we save two in future treatment.

The preventive health and health service block grant provides funding to States for a wide range of public health and preventive services, including breast and cervical screening, hypertension and cholesterol screening, health education, emergency medical technician training, rodent control, water fluoridation, and dental health. In addition to the block grant, several categorical programs include childhood lead poisoning prevention, injury control, and sexually transmitted disease control.

Although the block grant activities and categorical programs have been successful in providing some preventive health services, the current health promotion and disease prevention activities need vigorous revitalization. The public health system continues to suffer from lack of resources, lack of uniform data reporting, insufficient priorities, poor coordination between different levels of government, and inadequate accountability.

This legislation focuses on correcting the health problems of adolescents, women, and minorities, on injury prevention and on control and prevention of childhood lead poisoning by dramatically strengthening our public health system programs and infrastructure.

Contrary to standard thought, adolescents are not among the healthiest Americans. About one in five of today's adolescents have at least one serious health problem. The future contributions of young people are too often lost because of the senseless violence of suicide and homicide, or the tragedy of malnutrition or chronic despair which occur in many of our youth. Young Americans are the Nation's future, and we must act systematically and aggressively to meet their complex needs.

In women, cardiovascular disease accounts for 28 percent of all deaths. In 1991, an estimated 175,000 new causes of breast cancer and about 44,500 deaths will occur. In addition, osteoporosis, obesity, and infertility are major threats to the health and well-being of women in America.

Minorities and the poor continue to suffer disproportionately from serious health conditions. Many preventable diseases occur at higher rates and access to quality health promotion and disease prevention services are inadequate.

Unintentional injuries are the fourth leading cause of death resulting in about 100,000 deaths each year. Nonfatal injuries are responsible for 1 of every 6 hospital days. The economic costs from injuries have been estimated at $100 billion annually.

This legislation strengthens our efforts in adolescent health, the health of women, in lead poisoning prevention and screening, and in injury control. It will help reduce the heavy burden of chronic illness, morbidity, and disability in minorities and the disadvantaged and it will strengthen the current preventive health and health services block grant and categorical programs. Plainly put, this legislation will save millions of American lives through the promotion of health and the prevention of disease.

The economic costs are staggering. It is the human costs, that shock the mind, heart, and conscience of the Nation. We can do far more to prevent the physical, emotional, and mental anguish that result from premature disease, disability, and death and that scar so many families in our society.

With this legislation, we take a major step toward improving the Nation's health and enhancing our future. I urge my colleagues to support this measure, and I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"(o) DURATION OF GRANT.—The period during which payments are made to an entity from a grant under subsection (a) may not exceed 3 years. The provision of such payments shall be subject to annual approval by the Secretary of the payments and subject to the availability of appropriations for the fiscal year involved to make the payments in such year. The preceding sentence may not be construed to establish a limitation on the number of grants under such subsection that may be made to an entity.

"(p) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE, AND SUPPLIES AND SERVICES IN LIEU OF GRANT FUNDS.—

"(1) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary may provide training and technical assistance to grantees under subsection (a) with respect to the planning, development, and operation of any program or service carried out under such subsection. Mr. D'AMATO:

S.J. Res. 228. A joint resolution designating the week beginning February 23, 1992, as "National Manufacturing Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL MANUFACTURING WEEK

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation designating the week of February 23 through 29, 1992, as "National Manufacturing Week."

This legislation celebrates the important contributions of the manufacturing industry to our economy, national defense, and way of life in the United States. Manufacturing directly employs over 18 million workers, and at least that many workers in the service sector depend on a sound manufacturing sector for their jobs. Manufacturing accounts for some of the highest paying jobs and therefore is an important source of tax revenue for local, State, and the Federal Government. Sound manufacturing is essential for a strong national defense. A strong manufacturing sector is directly linked to leadership in science and technology.

The manufacturing industry is on the move; it is reinventing itself with new factories, new products, new workers, and a new management style. The result is lower costs, greater productivity, better products, more modern facilities, higher quality, vigorous expansion of exports, and restructured organizations. We are all encouraged by the contribution manufacturing is making to the future of our country. It is a newness that warrants recognition. Therefore I urge all of my distinguished colleagues to support and cosponsor this resolution to make February 23 through 29, 1992, "National Manufacturing Week."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in its entirely at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 228

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Whereas throughout the history of the United States, manufacturing has contributed substantially to the economic well being of the Nation;

Whereas manufacturing is an essential yet often overlooked component of the economic foundation of the United States;

Whereas a strong manufacturing industry contributes to continued growth, prosperity, and high-paying jobs in every other sector of the national economy;

Whereas manufacturing directly employs more than 18,000,000 workers, and at least 18,000,000 workers in the service sector depend on a sound manufacturing sector for their jobs;

Whereas manufacturing accounts for many of the highest paying jobs in the economy, and manufacturing wages are 20 percent higher on the average than non-manufacturing wages;

Whereas in the 1980's, manufacturing increased from 20 to 23 percent of the gross national product, and manufacturing productivity in the last decade has increased at an annual rate of 3.6 percent, 3 times faster than the rate at which non-manufacturing activity has increased;

Whereas the quality revolution has been one of the most important factors contributing to the recent resurgence of manufacturing in the United States;

Whereas manufacturing is an important source of tax revenue for the Federal Government, and State and local governments;

Whereas the continued leadership of the United States in science and technology is inherently linked to the success of manufacturing;

Whereas manufactured goods account for more than 80 percent of the trade deficit of the United States, indicating that manufacturing is especially important to overall national competitiveness and international trade;

Whereas a sound manufacturing economy is an essential precondition for a strong national defense;

Whereas the school children of the Nation should be educated about job opportunities in manufacturing;

Whereas the people of the United States should be educated about the importance of manufacturing to the economy, the international competitiveness, and the standard of living of the Nation, and about the challenges and changing nature of manufacturing; Now therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning February 23, 1992, is designated as "National Manufacturing Week," and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.•

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 75—RELATIVE TO AWARDING OF THE PRESIDENTIAL UNIT CITATION TO THE CREW OF THE U.S.S. "NEVADA" FOR THEIR HEROISM DURING THE ATTACK ON PEARL HARBOR

Mr. REID (for himself and Mr. BRYAN) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services:

S. CON. RES. 75

Whereas the Japanese military forces attacked the United States on December 7, 1941, at Pearl Harbor in Hawaii;

Whereas the U.S.S. Nevada was the oldest battleship present during the attack, and was, despite being moored directly astern of the U.S.S. Arizona and restricted by a dredging line astern, the only battleship able to get underway during the attack;

Whereas the U.S.S. Nevada, prior to getting underway, had been struck by a torpedo which tore a 20-foot by 20-foot hole in her bow and by several bombs which started fires in her forecastle and amidships;

Whereas there was only one officer senior to the rank of Ensign aboard the U.S.S. Nevada, and he manned his battle station in Central Station deep in the ship;

Whereas over 50 men were killed and over 100 wounded on the U.S.S. Nevada during the attack;

Whereas the outstanding teamwork, perseverance, and unfailing devotion to duty of the crew of the U.S.S. Nevada enabled them to perform courageously and gallantly; and

Whereas the role of the crew of the U.S.S. Nevada has been either downplayed or overlooked: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that the President should award the Presidential Unit Citation to the crew of the U.S.S. Nevada for their heroism and gallantry during the attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I speak here today in honor of one ship and its crew of brave sailors who fought for their country's honor. I am referring to the U.S.S. Nevada, a battleship present at Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941.

While the history of this Nation from the day it was born is one of an inevitable rise to power, perhaps no other date in history more reflects America's assumption of world leadership. The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor brought our country into the greatest war ever fought. The many forces of democracy and self-determination joined in a grand alliance to defeat totalitarianism. The men and women present at Pearl Harbor witnessed the United States entry into World War II, and many gave their lives over the following 4 years.

As almost everyone knows, the Japanese attack was a complete surprise. It was a quiet Sunday morning, and most of the Pacific fleet sat peacefully at anchor. Within a matter of hours, however, the Japanese torpedo planes and bombers had wrought intense destruction, suffering little damage in return.

Only a few American ships were able to escape destruction, and it is in honor of one of these ships that I rise today. The U.S.S. Nevada was the only battleship to get underway during the attack, despite receiving several major torpedo and bomb hits.

The brave crew of the U.S.S. Nevada fought hard that day to get their ship out of danger. After the attack, Congressional Medals of Honor and other decorations were awarded to some of the crewmembers. I rise today, however, in hope that the entire crew can be honored. I and my fellow Nevadan, Senator BRYAN, are sending to the desk a resolution. This resolution asks the President to award to the entire U.S.S. Nevada complement one of this country's highest honors: the Presidential Unit Citation.

Fifty years after the onset of World War II, it is time to honor those brave men and women who fought for their country. The crew of the U.S.S. Nevada worked together and fought bravely on December 7, 1941, and throughout the war. Awarding the Presidential Unit Citation to these individuals is the best way our country can show its appreciation.

Today, in the House of Representatives, Congresswoman VUCANOVICH and Congressman BILBRAY are introducing a companion resolution to this one. It is my hope that this resolution will pass both Houses quickly so that the brave crew of the U.S.S. Nevada can be honored during the 50th anniversary celebration of Pearl Harbor.

SENATE RESOLUTION 215—A RESOLUTION RELATING TO SENATE PAY INCREASES

Mr. COATS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

SENATE RESOLUTION 216—RELATIVE TO RECOGNITION OF CROATIA, SLOVENIA, BOSNIA-HERCEGOVINA, KOSOVA, AND MACEDONIA

Mr. D'AMATO (for himself and Mr. PRESSLER) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 216

Whereas, in 1990, the Republics of Croatia, Slovenia, Macedonia, and Bosnia-Hercegovina held free and fair elections;

Whereas, in 1991, the citizens of Kosova held as free and fair elections as were possible under martial law;

Whereas, on June 25, 1991, the Republic of Macedonia declared its independence after 95 percent of the population supported independence in a September 8, 1991 referendum;

Whereas, on September 8, 1991, the freely elected Assembly of the republic of Bosnia-Hercegovina declared Bosnia-Hercegovina a sovereign state;

Whereas, in a September 26, 1991 referendum, a vast majority of the citizens of Kosova approved independence;

Whereas the United States should advance the principles of peace, democracy, human rights, self-determination, respect for existing borders, and respect for existing borders, and respect for international law: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President should confer diplomatic recognition upon, and establish diplomatic relations with, the sovereign states of Croatia, Slovenia, Bosnia-Hercegovina, Kosova, and Macedonia.

The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this concurrent resolution to the President.

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today along with Senator PRESSLER to introduce a resolution urging the President to recognize the independence of the Yugoslav Republics of Croatia, Kosova, Slovenia, Macedonia, and Bosnia and Hercegovina.

The most basic tenet of democracy lies in representing the wishes of the citizenry. The citizens of Croatia, Kosova, Slovenia, Macedonia, and Bosnia and Hercegovina have sent a clear message of their desire for independence to the leadership in Yugoslavia. Overwhelmingly, each Republic, holding free and fair elections this year, stated their clear passion for freedom. Up to now, their message has been ignored.

It is my firm belief that the United States, the most powerful model of democracy in history, has a clear responsibility to support those who seek to carry the torch of democracy. The only road to true peace in Europe is the road of self-determination. The citizens of these Republics have chosen this road overwhelmingly and we must support them throughout their treacherous travels against the repressive forces in Yugoslavia.

The situation in Yugoslavia has raged into civil war. Thousands of innocent civilians have been murdered, hundreds of thousands have been displaced, hospitals have been bombed, schools have been bombed, and hundreds of churches destroyed. All of this destruction because Serbian dictator Slobodan Milosevic, the most brutal Communist dictator in Europe, decided that he wanted a larger piece of Yugoslavia for himself and his Serbian brethren.

Slobodan Milosevic is the butcher of Belgrade. He has blatantly defied 11 European Community cease-fires, and he continues to kill the innocent. He kills those that seek freedom and those that seek democracy.

Just 2 days ago, the Serbian delegation walked out of EC-sponsored peace talks at the Hague. The EC threatened sanction on those parties that left the peace table, yet when the Serbs walked out the EC delayed all action. Mr. President, while the EC fiddles, Zagreb burns.

And it's not just Zagreb which suffers. The historic town of Dubrovnik, the jewel of the Adriatic, has been under attack for weeks, without water, food, or electricity. This town has no military significance, yet the Milosevic ego could not be contained. He is a dictator bent on destruction.

Yesterday afternoon several Croatian students representing 85 students of Dubrovnik who undertook a hunger strike on October 22 came to my office. During the meeting one of the students asked if there is anyone who can stop the killing. Mr. President, I firmly believe that only the United States, a country that has always stood behind those seeking peace, freedom, and democracy, can stop this killer.

Milosevic's reign of terror is neither new or limited to Croatia. We must never forget the suffering of the close to 2 million Albanians in Kosova. Suffering under a Milosevic, imposed martial law for over 2½ years, they have seen thousands of innocent people die, including women and children, and many more arrested unjustly. Hundreds of thousands have been dismissed from jobs because of their beliefs. Is this just? Is this humane? Who will help these people?

Mr. President, it has become quite obvious that help will not come from the European Community. Therefore, it must come from this distinguished body. By recognizing the sovereignty of these republics, who have all voted themselves independence, we will send the strongest of messages to the killer Milosevic.

We cannot wait. We cannot delay. We cannot monitor. We must act and we must act now because for every minute we wait, more innocent men, women and children die.•

SENATE RESOLUTION 217—RELATIVE TO THE OZONE

Mr. GORE (for himself, Mr. ADAMS, MR. AKAKA, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. COHEN, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DODD, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. KERRY, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. PELL, Mr. SIMON, Mr. WELLSTONE, and Mr. WIRTH) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Environment and Public Works:

Whereas the stratospheric ozone layer, which protects all living things from harmful ultraviolet radiation from the sun, has been severely depleted in many areas of the globe;

Whereas recent scientific data show that the ozone layer over densely populated areas of the United States and other countries in the northern midlatitudes has thinned twice as fast as had previously been measured and as had been projected by theoretical models and the depletion is persisting into the warmer months of the year, and has reached significant levels even in summer;

Whereas ozone depletion in the Southern Hemisphere is proceeding even more rapidly than in the Northern Hemisphere;

Whereas the incidence of skin cancer and cataracts is expected to rise significantly and the human immune system may be suppressed due to increased exposure to ultraviolet radiation;

Whereas increased exposure to ultraviolet radiation threatens food crops and some wild plants, and interferes with the ability of phytoplankton, the microscopic organisms that are at the base of the oceanic food chain, to photosynthesize and to reproduce;

Whereas the scientific evidence shows that chlorofluorocarbons, hydrochlorofluorocarbons, and other halogenated chemicals undergo reactions in the stratosphere that lead to the rapid destruction of the ozone layer;

Whereas the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency is required under the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990 to accelerate the scheduled phaseout of ozone-destroying substances if it is determined in the light of scientific evidence that a more stringent schedule is necessary to protect human health and the environment;

Whereas the recent scientific findings make necessary a reappraisal of both domestic and international policy on the control of ozone-destroying chemicals; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That—

(1) the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should accelerate the interim phaseout schedules and the final phaseout date of chlorofluorocarbons, carbon tetrachloride, methyl chloroform, and halons as required pursuant to section 606 of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990, and shall provide for complete phaseout as early as possible;

(2) the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should accelerate the interim phaseout schedule and the final phaseout date of those hydrochlorofluorocarbons that have relatively long atmospheric lifetimes, high ozone depletion potentials, or high global warming potentials;

(3) the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should prioritize efforts to issue regulations, as required pursuant to title VI of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990, providing for the recapture and recycling of ozone-destroying substances as used in appliances and motor vehicle air conditioners, and for the elimination of such substances as used in nonessential consumer products;

(4) the President of the United States should urge the Contracting Parties to the Montreal protocol to accelerate the interim phase out schedules and the final phaseout date of the ozone-destroying chemicals currently covered by the protocol;

(5) the President should urge the contracting parties to include hydrochlorofluorocarbons within the terms of the Montreal protocol, and to provide for the most rapid phaseout of those hydrochlorofluorocarbons with relatively long atmospheric lifetimes, high ozone depletion potentials, or high global warming potentials;

(6) the President should urge the contracting parties to amend the Protocol to include recapture and recycling provisions and to prohibit the venting or releasing of ozone-destroying chemicals from refrigeration and air-conditioning units into the atmosphere by date certain;

(7) the President should urge the contracting parties, by providing technical assistance and through other measures as appropriate, to accelerate the compliance of developing countries with the terms of the Montreal protocol.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise to speak on a different subject, one that I have addressed here before. Late last month, the International Ozone Scientific Assessment Panel sounded a loud alarm. I spoke to my colleagues on the floor the day the new data was released, and I indicated then that the news was not good, confirming earlier reports that ozone depletion is proceeding some two to three times faster than had ever been found or measured or predicted before, over almost every part of the globe, including over this Capitol Building, over Oklahoma, over Louisiana, over Arkansas, over Tennessee, over Nevada, over all parts of the United States.

The scientists also reported that, for the first time, they had detected significant levels of ozone depletion in the summer months. The implications of this finding for human health, for the stability of agricultural crops, indeed for the entire food chain on which all life depends, are ominous. We have, in fact, changed our environment, and in such a way that for our lifetimes and for our children's lifetimes, we will have to take new precautions simply to enjoy the pleasure of spending time outdoors.

Of course, while we can use floppy hats and sunglasses, animals and plants cannot. And earlier this month, actually late last month, a new scientific study was released confirming for the first time that the extra levels of ultraviolet B radiation, coming through the atmosphere because of the depleted ozone layer, interfere with the photosynthesis by plankton in the ocean. That is the base of the food chain in the oceans, and the implications of those findings are very ominous indeed, as well.

There was a story yesterday, Mr. President, about hunters in the southern part of South America known as Patagonia. Patagonia, as you know, is at the tip of South America. Part is in Argentina and part in Brazil. The ozone hole above Antarctica now spreads out over an area three times as large as the continental United States of America.

The edges of that ozone hole now cover Patagonia or part of Patagonia. Some communities there are now within the ozone hole. That is the reason why some saw significance in this news report from Patagonia about hunters finding blind rabbits.

Why do they test medications and cosmetics intended for human beings on rabbits? That is another whole controversy. But one of the reasons why rabbits are used for some tests has to do with the similarity between a rabbit's eye and a human being's eye. The fact that extra ultraviolet radiation is linked to extra cases of cataracts and blindness here in the United States over the next several decades is related to the fact that in these land areas within the ozone hole hunters are now finding blind rabbits.

When do we wake up and react to this? When do we say this is worth responding to?

Actually, the world has responded to a limited degree with the Montreal Protocol. But one of the provisions in the Clean Air Act, Mr. President, tells the administration that when significant new evidence is found about ozone depletion they have to speed up the phaseout of the chemicals that cause ozone depletion. The law does not say the administration may speed up the phaseout of these chemicals. The administration is required to speed up the phaseout of these chemicals.

Is this new evidence significant within the meaning of the term as it appears in the law? Of course it is. Scientists from nations around the world gathered in Switzerland in closed-door meetings for a week to verify whether the evidence really showed what they were afraid that it did.

When they verified it, they sent out emergency messages by telefax to the government of every nation in the world to say the new evidence is significant. It is dangerous. It is grave. We have to act further. We have to speed up the phaseout of these chemicals.

The very next morning spokesmen for the administration appeared on television news shows, saying this is significant. We need to take action.

Where is the action? I heard the words. I have waited as time passed. Nothing has happened.

I have a deep respect for the head of the Environmental Protection Agency, Mr. Bill Reilly. I have a feeling that if he could set the policy the President would have already announced a speedup of the phaseout of these chemicals.

But he does not set the policy. The President sets the policy. And he pretends that it is Mr. Sununu who sets the policy, but the President sets the policy. And when Mr. Sununu and Mr. Reilly disagree, they tell Mr. Reilly to shut up and be quiet, and stop calling for the President to do the right thing.

Recently, and let me say this as a parenthetical thought: One of the large environmental organizations looked at the President's environmental record and said that he deserves a D-plus. Mr. Reilly protested loudly, and said the President deserves a C. Deserves a C.

I do not think he even deserves a C. But if that is the best case that can be made by a spokesman for the environmental President, then it is a pretty sad commentary on what that President has really done and what he has not done.

But let me come back, Mr. President, to this case. The chemicals that destroy the stratospheric ozone layer were first used in small quantities about 60 years ago. One of them, carbon tetrachloride, was first used about 80 years ago. But the main ones were first used in small quantities 60 years ago and were not used in significant amounts until after World War II. The chlorine began to build up in the atmosphere as these chemicals broke down high in the atmosphere.

And now the atmosphere of the entire Earth has been changed in several ways, but in this respect it has been changed in terms of the amount of chlorine atoms in the atmosphere.

In this Chamber, the air that these pages are breathing right now, that you are breathing, Mr. President, that I am breathing has 600 percent more chlorine atoms in each lungful than it did when this Chamber was constructed, than it did when I was born. That is because the atmosphere of the entire earth has been changed to that degree in only 30 or 40 years' time.

Almost 20 years ago, two scientists, one of them named Sherwood Rowland, and the other his assistant, Mario Melino, discovered the linkage between these chemicals, chlorofluorocarbons, and there are other bromides and carbon tetrachloride, and the others, but the main actors are the chlorofluorocarbons. He discovered the linkage between the chemicals and destruction of the stratospheric ozone layer.

A lot of people did not believe it. He was taken off the invitation list for scientific meetings. A lot of chemical companies that were profiting from this business also sponsored some of these meetings in part. They did not want him to, but as time passed by the evidence became clear to others and he was vindicated.

Then the ozone hole appeared and the world scientific community rang the alarm bells, and governments responded belatedly, but they did respond, and the Montreal protocol was signed. Every year since then, new evidence has been coming in and those provisions have been getting stronger.

Here in the United States, as I said a moment ago, we anticipated when the Clean Air Act was passed, and I had an amendment on the floor here that was accepted, that new evidence would come out and that the phaseout of these chemicals, which is on a slow and leisurely pace, now fast according to past circumstances, but slow and leisurely compared to what the crisis is we anticipated that that pace would have to be speeded up significantly, and the law says when significant new evidence comes out the phaseout has to be speeded up.

Where is the action? What is the environmental President doing? When is he going to respond? I know I asked the question in a tone that implies disbelief, but truly, Mr. President, what are we doing waiting to respond?

Today I am introducing a resolution on behalf of one of my colleagues urging the administration to act now as the law requires them to do, to accelerate the phaseout of the ozone-destroying chemicals that are placing each of us and our children in such grave jeopardy.

My colleagues may recall that I introduced a similar resolution last April when similarly disturbing news was reported by the scientific community with regard to ozone depletion. I brought that resolution to the floor. And what happened? The administration put a hold on it. The President sent word to his allies here: Stop the resolution. We do not want action. We do not want it to speed up the phaseout of these chemicals. We will just keep things as they are.

Their argument was that the United States should not take unilateral action to step up the phaseout of chlorofluorocarbons. Unilateral action? The truth, Mr. President, is the United States of America is way behind on this. Other countries are right out in front of us. They have some leadership. They are listening to their scientists. They care about future generations. They are moving much faster than we are.

Many countries have already announced that they are going to completely stop the production and use of these incredibly harmful chemicals within 3½ years, in 1995, 5 years before either required to do so under the Montreal protocols. But because President Bush refuses to act, we are lagging way behind. Even the industry, even the companies that profit from these chemicals are way ahead of President Bush on this. One company in the United States indicated that they would, in response to the new findings in their production of these chemicals some 4 years ahead of schedule.

Where is the environmental President? If even the companies profiting from the practice are willing to move faster, if our allies in other countries are moving twice as fast as we are, where is the environmental President?

In press interviews and statements immediately after the release of the data, Mr. Reilly said the data was startling. This is last April. There have been two releases—one last April and one just a couple of weeks ago.

Last April, when many of us called for speeding up the phaseout, Mr. Reilly said this evidence is startling, and the implications for policy are clear. And, of course, they were. And the Environmental Protection Agency, under Mr. Reilly, released evidence showing that the evidence from the satellites clearly means that many millions of Americans will suffer cancer and many hundreds of thousands additional will die in the United States because of the extra depletion of the stratospheric ozone layer.

But still, incredibly, there has been no action by EPA or by the President. It is business as usual at EPA and they are only now getting around to publishing preliminary rulemaking on some of the Clean Air Act provisions.

Obviously, Mr. President, Mr. Reilly appreciates the need for much more aggressive action. It must just, therefore, be one more example of where Mr. Bush's political heavies rather than his scientific experts are calling the shots. We have seen many other examples of this. Mr. Sununu and Vice President QUAYLE and his counsel on competitiveness have been keeping themselves very busy thwarting policies that are needed to protect our health and our environment.

In addition to introducing the resolution, Mr. President, I am also sending a letter to the President today calling for an end to these irresponsible and immoral delay tactics—and I use the word advisedly, looking at these youngsters who are Pages here and looking at the implications of the evidence for the world they will inherit. And I am joined in this letter by 23 of our colleagues.

We urge the President to take action to stop the continued production and use of these chemicals depleting the ozone and confront this process that is now out of control, and stop the other grave threat that we face, the intensified greenhouse effect that our pollution of the atmosphere is causing.

And, incidentally, the new data shows very clearly that the role of CO_2 in global warming is even more pronounced than was thought before these latest findings were released. The ozone scientists determined that we need to redouble our efforts to reduce emissions of CO_2 and specifically called for it because the global warming impact of CFC's is at least in part mitigated due to the interaction with the ozone. The chemicals themselves trap heat, but when the ozone is destroyed, then that partially offsets it. What it means is that CO_2 is even more important than was thought.

The administration was playing a fast and loose game in pretending that if they got rid of CFC's by the end of this century, that would meet their commitment to reduce greenhouse gases. The implications of these new findings are, of course, that that just does not work and they have to come up with a real policy on CO_2.

The astonishing and unprecedented rate of the depletion of ozone that we are witnessing underscores as well the message that the scientists have long tried to send us with regard to natural processes. We simply cannot assume that nature will respond gracefully and gradually to the intensifying pressures that we are exerting. Dangerous thresholds can, indeed, be reached and, once crossed, our ability to mitigate or avoid harmful impact may be extremely limited.

The bottomline, Mr. President, is that we need to accelerate the phaseout of all of the chemicals now destroying the stratospheric ozone layer and we need to move aggressively to curb our emission of carbon dioxide.

I hope my other colleagues join us in cosponsoring this resolution, and I hope the President will finally hear our call and stop dragging his feet and take a leadership role on these critical issues.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter to the President to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, November 7, 1991.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We are writing to urge you to take immediate action to address the global environmental problems we face. The stakes are high, and we can no longer afford simply to call for further study. Your leadership is critical.

Last month, the International Ozone Trends Assessment Panel sounded a loud alarm. Confirming earlier reports that ozone depletion is proceeding some 200 percent faster than had ever previously been measured or predicted, the scientists also reported that—for the first time—they had detected significant levels of ozone depletion in the summer months. The implications of this finding for human health, for the stability of agricultural crops, indeed, for the entire food chain on which all life depnds is ominous. We have in fact changed our environment, and in such a way that for our lifetimes and for our children's lifetimes, we will have to take precautions simply to enjoy the pleasure of spending time outdoors.

The Ozone Trends report also has significant implications for global warming. First, the scientists determined that the contribution of chlorofluorocarbons to the enhanced greenhouse effect is, at least in part, mitigated by the depletion of ozone, which is also a greenhouse gas. The implication here is that, in our effort to counter the effects of global warming, we cannot rely on the steps we are taking to phaseout CFC's under the Montreal Protocol or the Clean Air Act. Rather we must redouble our efforts to reduce our emissions of those gases whose radiative effect is not offset by other reactions in the atmosphere—particularly and most importantly, carbon dioxide.

Second, the astonishing and unprecedented rate of the depletion that we are witnessing underscores the message that the scientists have long tried to send us with regard to natural processes. We simply cannot assume that nature will respond gracefully and gradually to the intensifying pressures we are exerting. Dangerous thresholds can indeed be reached, and once we cross these critical points, our ability to mitigate or avoid harmful impacts is extremely limited.

The bottomline: we need to accelerate the phaseout of all chemicals that destroy the ozone layer, and we need to move aggressively to curb our emissions of carbon dioxide. The Congress has taken action on both of these fronts, and many other nations are far ahead of us in responding to these threats. Leadership from the White House is now essential.

We feel that this situation is of the utmost urgency, and we sincerely hope that you will give it your immediate attention. Congress is moving; the White House must too.

Sincerely,

Brock Adams, Daniel K. Akaka, Jeff Bingaman, Dale Bumpers, William S. Cohen, Christopher J. Dodd, Albert Gore, Jr., Joseph R. Biden, Jr., Richard H. Bryan, John H. Chafee, Thomas A. Daschle, Daniel K. Inouye, Edward M. Kennedy, Herbert Kohl, Carl Levin, Barbara A. Mikulski, Claiborne Pell, Paul Wellstone, John F. Kerry, Patrick J. Leahy, Joseph I. TELEPHONE ADVERTISING CONSUMER RIGHTS ACT

PRESSLER AMENDMENT NO. 1310

Mr. WARNER (for Mr. PRESSLER) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1410) relating to the rights of consumers in connection with telephone advertising, as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Telephone Advertising Consumer Rights Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that:

(1) The use of the telephone to market goods and services to the home and other businesses is now pervasive due to the increased use of cost-effective telemarketing techniques.

(2) Over 30,000 businesses actively telemarket goods and services to business and residential customers.

(3) More than 30,000 solicitors call more than 18,000,000 Americans every day.

(4) Total United States sales generated through telemarketing amounted to $435,000,000,000 in 1990, a more than four-fold increase since 1984.

(5) Unrestricted telemarketing, however, can be an intrusive invasion of privacy and, when an emergency or medical assistance telephone line is seized, a risk to public safety.

(6) Many consumers are outraged over the proliferation of intrusive, nuisance calls to their homes from telemarketers.

(7) Over half the States now have statutes restricting various uses of the telephone for marketing, but telemarketers can evade their prohibitions through interstate operations; therefore, Federal law is needed to control residential telemarketing practices.

(8) The Constitution does not prohibit restrictions on commercial telemarketing solicitations.

(9) Individuals' privacy rights, public safety interests, and commercial freedoms of speech and trade must be balanced in a way that protects the privacy of individuals and permits legitimate telemarketing practices.

SEC. 3. RESTRICTIONS ON THE USE OF TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT FOR ADVERTISING.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Title II of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 228. RESTRICTIONS ON THE USE OF TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT FOR ADVERTISING.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(A) to store or produce telephone numbers to be called, using a random or sequential number generator; and

"(B) to dial such numbers.

"(2) The term 'telephone facsimile machine' means equipment which has the capacity to transcribe text or images, or both, from paper into an electronic signal and to transmit that signal over a regular telephone line.

"(3) The term 'unsolicited telephone solicitation' means a telephone call by a live person for the purpose of encouraging the purchase or rental of, or investment in, property, goods, or services which is transmitted to any person without that person's prior express invitation or permission. Such term does not include calls or messages made by or on behalf of a tax exempt nonprofit organization.

"(4) The term 'unsolicited advertisement' means any material advertising the commercial availability or quality of any property, goods, or services which is transmitted to any person without that person's prior express invitation or permission.

"(b) RESTRICTIONS.—It shall be unlawful for any person within the United States by means of telephone—

"(1) to make any unsolicited telephone solicitation in violation of the regulations prescribed by the Commission pursuant to subsection (c);

"(2) to send an unsolicited advertisement by a facsimile machine; and

"(3) to make any call (other than a call made for emergency purposes or made with the prior consent of the called party) using any automatic telephone dialing system, or an artificial or prerecorded voice—

"(A) to any emergency telephone line or pager (including any '911' line and any emergency line or pager of a hospital, medical physician or service office, health care facility, or fire protection or law enforcement agency) or to the telephone line of any guest room or patient room of a hospital, health care facility, elderly home, or similar establishment; or

"(B) to any telephone number assigned to a paging service, cellular telephone service, specialized mobile radio service, or radio common carrier service, or any other service for which the called party is charged for the call.

"(c) PROTECTION OF SUBSCRIBER PRIVACY RIGHTS.—

"(1) RULEMAKING PROCEEDING REQUIRED.—Within 120 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall initiate a rulemaking proceeding concerning the need to protect residential telephone subscribers' privacy rights to avoid receiving unsolicited telephone solicitations to which they object. The proceeding shall—

"(A) further define 'unsolicited telephone solicitation' consistent with subsection (a)(3);

"(B) compare and evaluate alternative methods and procedures, including the use of telephone electronic databases, telephone network technologies, special directory markings, industry and company based 'do not call' systems, and any other alternatives, individually or in combination, for protecting such privacy rights, in terms of their cost effectiveness and their other advantages and disadvantages;

"(C) evaluate the categories of public and private entities that would have the capacity to establish and administer such methods and procedures;

"(D) consider whether such methods and procedures may apply for local telephone solicitations, such as those of small businesses or holders of second class mail permits; and

"(E) develop proposed regulations to implement the methods and procedures that the Commission determines are most effective and efficient to accomplish the purposes of this section.

"(2) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 240 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall conclude the rulemaking proceeding initiated under paragraph (1) and shall prescribe regulations to implement methods and procedures for protecting the privacy rights described in such paragraph in an efficient, effective, and economic manner and without the imposition of any additional charge to telephone subscribers.

"(d) TECHNICAL AND PROCEDURAL STANDARDS.—

"(1) PROHIBITION.—It shall be unlawful for any person within the United States—

"(A) to initiate any communication using a telephone facsimile machine, or to make any telephone call using any automatic telephone dialing system that does not comply with the technical and procedural standards prescribed under this subsection, or to use any telephone facsimile machine or automatic telephone dialing system (to make any telephone solicitation) in a manner that does not comply with such standards; or

"(B) to use a computer or other electronic device to send any message via a telephone facsimile machine unless such person clearly marks, in a margin at the top or bottom of each transmitted page of the message or on the first page of each transmission, the data and time it is sent and an identification of the business, other entity, or individual sending the message and the telephone number of the sending machine or of such business, other entity, or individual.

"(2) TELEPHONE FACSIMILE MACHINES.—The Commission shall revise the regulations setting technical and procedural standards for telephone facsimile machines to require that any such machine which—

"(A) is manufactured after 6 months after the date of enactment of this section; and

"(B) can be used for the distribution of unsolicited advertising, clearly marks, in a margin at the top or bottom of each transmitted page or on the first page of each transmission, the date and time sent, an identification of the business, other entity, or individual sending the message, and the telephone number of the sending machine or of such business. The Commission shall exempt from such standards, for 18 months after such date of enactment, telephone facsimile machines that do not have the capacity for automatic dialing and transmission and that are not capable of operation through an interface with a computer.

"(3) ARTIFICIAL OR PRERECORDED VOICE SYSTEMS.—The Commission shall prescribe technical and procedural standards for systems that are used to transmit any artificial or prerecorded voice message via telephone. Such standards shall require that—

"(A) to the extent not otherwise prohibited by law, all artificial or prerecorded telephone messages (i) shall, at the beginning of the message, state clearly the identity of the business, other entity, or individual initiating the call, and (ii) shall, during or after the message, state clearly the telephone number or address or such business, other entity, or individuals; and

"(B) any such system will automatically release the called party's line within 5 seconds of the time the system receives notification that the called party has hung up, to allow the called party's line to be used to make or receive other calls.

"(e) PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.—A person who has received more than one telephone call from the same entity, or delivering the same or a similar message, in violation of this section or regulations prescribed under this section may, if otherwise permitted by the laws or rules of court of a State, bring in an appropriate court of that State an action in such person's own name to enjoin such calls, an action to recover for actual monetary loss or be awarded $500 in damages for each violation, whichever is greater, or both such actions. The court may, in its discretion, increase the award for monetary loss to an amount not to exceed three times the actual monetary loss, or to increase the award of damages to an amount not to exceed $1,500 for each violation, if the court finds the defendant willfully or knowingly violated such regulations.

"(f) ACTIONS BY STATE ATTORNEYS GENERAL.—

"(1) AUTHORITY OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL.—Whenever the attorney general of a State, or an official or agency designated by a State, has reason to believe that any person has engaged or is engaging in a pattern or practice of telephone calls to residents of that State in violation of this section or the regulations prescribed under this section, the State may bring a civil action on behalf of its residents to enjoin such calls, an action to recover for actual monetary loss or $500 in damages for each violation, or both such actions. The court may, in its discretion, increase the award for monetary loss to an amount not to exceed three times the actual monetary loss, or to increase the award of damages to an amount not to exceed $1,500 for each violation, if the court finds the defendant willfully or knowingly violated such regulations.

"(2) EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL COURTS.—The district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any territory, and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia shall have exclusive jurisdiction over all civil actions brought under this subsection. Upon proper application, such courts shall also have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus, or orders affording like relief, commanding the defendant to comply with the provisions of this section and regulations prescribed under this section, including the requirement that the defendant take such action as is necessary to remove the danger of violation of any such provision. Upon a proper showing, a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond.

"(3) RIGHTS OF COMMISSION.—The State shall serve prior written notice of any such civil action upon the Commission and provide the Commission with a copy of its complaint, except in any case where such prior notice is not feasible, in which case the States shall serve such notice immediately upon instituting such action. The Commission shall have the right (A) to intervene in the action, (B) upon so intervening, to be heard on all matters arising therein, and (C) to file petitions for appeal.

"(4) VENUE; SERVICE OF PROCESS.—Any civil action brought under this subsection in a district court of the United States may be brought in the district wherein the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts business or wherein the violation occurred or is occurring, and process in such cases may be served in any district in which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found.

"(5) INVESTIGATORY POWERS.—For purposes of bringing any civil action under this subsection, nothing in this section shall prevent the attorney general of a State from exercising the powers conferred on the attorney general by the laws of such State to conduct investigations or to administer oaths or affirmations or to compel the attendance of witnesses or the production of documentary and other evidence.

"(6) EFFECT ON STATE COURT PROCEEDINGS.—Nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit an authorized State official from proceeding in State court on the basis of an alleged violation of any general civil or criminal statute of such State.

"(7) LIMITATION.—Whenever the Commission has instituted a civil action for violation of this section or regulations prescribed under this section, no State may, during the pendency of such action instituted by the Commission, subsequently institute a civil action against any defendant named in the Commission's complaint for any violation as alleged in the Commission's complaint.

"(8) DEFINITION.—As used in this subsection, the term 'attorney general' means the chief legal officer of a State.

"(g) STATE LAW NOT PREEMPTED.—Nothing in this section or in the regulations prescribed under this section shall preempt any State law that imposes more restrictive intrastate requirements or regulations on, or which prohibits—

"(1) the use of telephone facsimile machines or other electronic devices to send unsolicited advertisements;

"(2) the use of automatic telephone dialing systems to transmit prerecorded telephone solicitations; and

"(3) the use of artificial voice or prerecorded messages.

"(h) PREEMPTION OF INCONSISTENT INTERSTATE COMMUNICATIONS LAWS.—This section preempts any provisions of State law concerning interstate communications that are inconsistent with the interstate communications provisions of this section.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 2(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 152(b)) is amended by striking "and 225" and inserting in lieu thereof ", 225, and 228".

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE QUESTION OF MOST-FAVORED-NATION TRADE STATUS FOR ROMANIA

• Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, as you may be aware, on October 28 the United States initialled a trade agreement with Romania. Immediately thereafter, the Romanian press reported that the accord would soon be formally signed and sent to the respective legislatures for ratification. It is my understanding that this trade agreement will contain a clause for the restoration of most-favored-nation [MFN] trade status to Romania.

It is clear that Romania, which enjoyed MFN status from 1975 until 1988, is suffering a severe economic crisis largely inherited from the tyrannical Ceausescu regime. Measures to transform the economy have exacerbated public hardship and discontent, prompting, most recently, the violent assault of the miners on Bucharest. We should not underestimate the serious challenge the Romanian authorities are facing, or the danger of isolating the country at a time of tremendous instability and uncertainty.

Nonetheless, Mr. President, I believe that further concrete progress toward pluralism and democracy are essential before we restore MFN status.

Last month, Senators D'AMATO, DODD, and HELMS joined me in circulating a "Dear Colleague" on this issue. We invited our colleagues to join us in sending a letter to President Bush, explaining our strong views on this subject. The letter has been mailed today, with 19 signatures. Copies have also been sent to Secretary Baker, Romanian President Ion Iliescu, and Romanian Ambassador Virgil Constantinescu. In our letter, we attempt to lay clear markers for the Romanian authorities.

The most important indicator will be the holding of timely, free and fair elections. As you may know, the national elections of May 1990 were tainted by serious harassment and intimidation of the opposition. Local elections have been repeatedly postponed; local administration is consequently in the hands of prefects and officials appointed by the government. We believe that a new round of national elections is critical to provide leadership responsive and accountable to the people.

It is clear, however, that a free and fair elections process will rest on a number of equally significant developments. Romania, as a member of the CSCE, has recognized that independent media are essential to a free and open society. Yet despite repeated appeals from the domestic and international community, television remains virtually entirely within the grip of the state. The state maintains a monopoly on printing works and controls the use of printing presses; opposition journalists and cultural figures continue to receive threats by phone and mail, and have even been subject to physical abuse. We will be looking for real action—not further bureaucratic delays—on these issues.

A free and fair elections process will also rely on improved control of the internal security and intelligence forces. There are many indications that remnants of the Securitate are continuing their old tactics of harassment and intimidation. Steps should be taken to ensure that military and paramilitary forces, internal security and intelligence services, and the police are subject to the effective direction and control of the appropriate civil authorities, in conformity with accepted international standards.

And overall, we expect greater protection of individual human rights, particularly with regard to minorities. We are concerned about laws that seem to inhibit basic freedoms, such as the restrictive law on citizenship. We are troubled by acts of violence against individuals and groups that have thus far gone unpunished. We regret the tendency toward discrimination in the administration of justice, which has undermined confidence in the rule of law. And we are disappointed that progress toward privatization has been slow.

We realize that the restoration of MFN status would be of significant economic, and political, benefit to Romania. Nevertheless, we believe that the restoration of MFN for Romania should be postponed until substantial progress toward democratic pluralism—including timely, free and fair elections—and a market economy is achieved.•

IN APPRECIATION OF OREGON'S COUNTIES

• Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, today I rise to salute the local governmental organizations in my home State of Oregon. These grassroots legislative bodies are the cogs and wheels in a system in which I have been involved for the past 40 years, a system comprising the lifeblood of the public service industry in my State.

None of the elected officials making up these local governmental organizations holds office because of the high salary or great working conditions. They are in office because their nature is to serve their fellow human beings and to better their communities. Their generosity and unselfish sacrifice constitutes the very best of the local governmental organizations we have in Oregon.

Throughout my years as a U.S. Senator, I have been fortunate to work with a great many county and local officials dedicated to making Oregon a better place. I would like to take this opportunity to elaborate on several recent county/Federal partnerships working for the good of Oregonians.

One Federal/local partnership program working to benefit Oregonians and other people living in publicly owned areas of the United States is the Payment-In-Lieu-of-Taxes [PILT] Program. As many of my Senate colleagues from public-lands States know, the PILT system is essential to the funding of many county government services, such as fire protection, police protection, schools and roads.

In Oregon, 58 percent of our land base is owned by public entities such as the U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management. Some counties in Oregon contain upwards of 75 to 80 percent public lands—land which, if not for the PILT Program, would be entirely removed from county tax bases.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, many of the counties under the PILT Program are now at the program's ceiling, and are thus receiving no new money for local services at a time when the costs of such services are skyrocketing. Most are at this ceiling because the PILT Program, since it creation in 1976, has not been adjusted for inflation. Additionally, many of the rural PILT counties in Oregon, are feeling the crunch of extremely reduced revenues from other areas, such as historically low timber harvest levels and statewide budget cutbacks. The adjustments the PILT Program badly needs, however, are in sight.

I am proud to report that the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources recently passed a bill adjusting PILT payments to public-land counties to match the inflation rates of the past 15 years, while at the same time projecting yearly increases in PILT up until 1997. Nationwide, this legislation will increase the PILT Program over 100 years from approximately $105 million to $210 million per year.

Oregon will also see a dramatic increase in its PILT funding levels from approximately $2.9 million to $6.2 million per year. Assuming the bill passes the full Senate, the House of Representatives, and receives the President's signature, Oregon counties under strict budget guidelines will see some significant relief. Money for schools, roads, police, fire and other essential local services will now be available. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this legislation, and I am thankful to all those at the local level with whom I worked to ensure committee passage of this much needed piece of legislation.

Another testimony to the successful relationship between Oregon's county and Federal elected officials can be found in Wallowa County at the Nez Perce gravesite of Old Chief Joseph.

The Nez Perce tribe is seeking protection of this and 13 other sites of historical tribal significance in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Wyoming through legislation at the Federal level. The protection of the Old Chief Joseph site, however, requires the removal of land from Walowa County's tax base—a problem for the revenue-starved rural county.

Nevertheless, the Wallowa County Court, the U.S. Park Service, the Nez Perce Tribe, the owners of the land adjacent to the gravesite, and my office were able to craft a compromise which seeks to preserve the local tax base while at the same time protecting and enhancing the Old Chief Joseph site. I am exceedingly grateful for all the hard work contributed by all parties on this compromise and look forward to final passage of the Nez Perce park additions bill in both the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Finally, I would be remiss not to note the recently successful effort in Harney County regarding the exchange of land in the Warner Basin/Steens Mountain area of southeast Oregon. Here, county and Federal government officials worked together with private interests to forge a compromise on the protection of high desert lands in Harney County, OR.

Simple withdrawal of this land would have resulted in a large removal of private land from Harney County's tax base—a move which would have placed a significant burden on local tax revenue levels and the services provided by the local units of government. After much hard work and dedication, the Harney County government was able to agree on a resolution to this complex problem which: First, did not result in a loss of revenue due to a removal of land from the Harney County tax base; and second, directed the BLM not to engage in any land exchanges resulting in a net loss to either Harney or neighboring Lake Counties' tax bases.

The success of the Warner Basin/Steens Mountain land exchange sets a precedent for future county/Federal land exchange partnerships. The clear intent of both the county officials and Congress on this exchange was that land acquisitions should be accomplished to the greatest extent possible through land exchange. In this way, the interests and resources of county governments can be preserved.

This exchange rule has been the policy of the last two Presidential administrations, and it is one I strongly support. Additionally, it is a policy I plan to follow on any future land exchanges in my State. This approach will protect the public interest, it will protect the interest of the property owner seeking the transfer, and it assures that local governments are consulted as partners when land acquisitions are proposed. In the future, land acquisitions should be accomplished only when lands of equivalent value are exchanged within the county of acquisition.

Mr. President, in all of these successful projects there has been one common denominator—the dedication and hard work of Oregon's county and local elected officials. These hard-working individuals live on the front liens of Oregon's democratic process and represent our constituents directly in their individual communities and businesses. And while my statement today has focused exclusively on local/Federal partnerships on natural resource-related issues, I in no way want to diminish the multitude of people-related issues these county and local officials must juggle on a day-to-day basis.

As an elected official from the State of Oregon, I am extremely privileged to work with these people, and I am hopeful we can continue to forge this local/Federal relationship in the future. The success of policies beneficial to the constituents of our State requires us to strive to work, not in isolation but in partnership with our county and local governments.

Mr. President, next week the Association of Oregon Counties convenes its annual meeting in Ashland, OR, and I am pleased that several of my field representatives will be present. They will be seeking to further cultivate the partnerships and collaborative efforts between the county and Federal governments we have worked on for so many years. I remain convinced that by our collective efforts, the county/Federal partnership can make a tremendous difference for Oregonians. I would like to take this opportunity to express my most sincere gratitude for all the work done by Oregon's county and local elected officials.•

THE LATVIAN CITIZENSHIP LAW

• Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss an issue that is assuming great importance in the nations formerly comprising the Soviet Union, that of citizenship for residents of those nations.

Latvia, which restored its independence in August of this year after 41 years of illegal Soviet occupation, is presently engaged in establishing legal standards for citizenship.

Under Soviet rule, the Latvian people were seriously threatened with ethnic annihilation. By the mid-1980's they constituted a scant majority in their own country. The Latvian language and Latvian culture were relegated to second-class status at best, and Latvian history was rewritten to denigrate the independent Latvian Republic of 1920–40.

But the Latvian people resisted, some openly, some quietly. Many went to labor camps and prison for their perserverance. Some, like Gunars Astra, gave their lives to the cause. But in the end, they were victorious. The Latvian people preserved their history, their language, their sense of nationhood, and having thrown off Moscow's yoke, they have rejoined the community of free nations.

And now the Latvian government is faced with the great task of re-establishing its nation under the rule of law, and one of the major questions is: "Who will become a citizen of the Latvia?"

On October 15, 1991 the Latvian Supreme Council adopted a resolution on the rights of citizens of Latvia and regulations for naturalization of noncitizens. According to this resolution, former citizens of independent Latvia and their descendants will be restored to citizenship by formal application before July 1, 1992.

Residents wishing to become naturalized citizens must be conversant in Latvian, know the fundamental principles of the Latvian Constitution, take an oath of loyalty to the Republic of Latvia, and have resided in Latvia for 16 years.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the first three requirements are eminently reasonable, and fully compatible with the naturalization laws of many advanced nations. However, I am frankly uneasy about the 16-year residency requirement, which appears designed to discourage citizenship by non-Latvians. It appears, unfortunately, that supporters of this 16-year provision wish to intentionally alienate non-Latvians currently residing in that country. I am aware of the "Ugly Russian" in the Baltics, the colonial mentality, the resolute refusal by many immigrants to learn the language of the indigenous population, making not the slightest effort to contribute to the society around him or her. I understand the unwillingness to share the new freedoms with such persons. But are old antagonisms worth the waste of human potential, the discord, the resentments that this provision, if enacted into law, will undoubtedly generate? Is this a reasonable way to proceed?

I am also aware that certain nations, Switzerland and Iceland among them, have similar time periods for naturalization. In the United States the normal waiting period is 5 years, 3 years for the spouse of an American citizen. I am reminded, however, that a potential citizen is aware of these provisions prior to attempting to emigrate to those countries and become naturalized, unlike the non-Latvian population of Latvia. And I would admit that the record of the United States has not been exemplary in this area. Regrettably, we only extended full citizenship to our native Americans in 1924.

Nevertheless, I believe it would be prudent to heed the words of Ambassador Max Kampelman, the United States head of delegation at the Moscow CSCE Conference on the Human Dimension. Ambassador Kampelman said:

> * * * human rights and fundamental freedoms are invested in the individual and not the group. Pluralistic democracies work because they respect every possible variation of self-identification and voluntary association by the individual. He or she has inalienable rights which each individual may exercise alone or in community with others. Group rights are by nature exclusionary and regrettably lead to a preoccupation with differences in a society rather than focus on the freely shared values that can hold societies together. Too often, a groups rights approach is a prescription for confusion, conflict and division.

I wonder if the citizenship resolution reflects an unfortunate and hastily formulated group approach to civil rights for minorities? It is certainly not in accordance with the spirit of the Helksinki Process.

At last word, the resolution on Latvian citizenship has not yet become law. I hope the Supreme Council and Latvian leadership will seriously reconsider the residency requirements. Ideally, we would hope that citizenship could be extended automatically to all legal residents at the time of the enactment of the citizenship law, or, at least, a more reasonable time period were considered. In any event, on the ashes of the Soviet Empire, there is confusion, conflict, and division enough. I fear this resolution on citizenship may only create more.●

SOURCE TAXES MUST GO

• Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, many residents in my home State of Washington are currently being taxed by other States simply because they worked there at one point in their life. These other States make pensioners pay by levying a source tax on their pension benefits. In many cases this unfair tax is automatically deducted from the retiree's pension benefits every month.

Recently I asked constituents in my home State of Washington to get their feelings on this practice. The vast majority of respondents agreed that we need to abolish this unfair tax. Many made reference to our Founding Fathers' battle against this same kind of unfair taxing and used terms like taxation without representation to express their outrage. I agree.

Interestingly, most of those who responded were not directly affected by the source tax. They were, nonetheless, outraged that source taxes exist because they see these taxes as fundamentally unfair and contradictory to the values we hold dear in America.

We need to correct this problem now. That is why I signed on as a cosponsor to S. 267. This bill will prohibit the taxing of retirement income by a State in which the retiree no longer resides. I encourage my colleagues to help me pass this bill quickly and restore fairness to our retirees' tax bill.•

TRIBUTES

• Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today I wish to call attention to the achievements of one of Massachusetts' finest citizens. For the past 15 years, Mr. Elmer Bartels has been the commissioner of the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission where he has been an outstanding advocate and role model for all citizens with disabilities in Massachusetts.

After the 1960 hockey accident which paralyzed him from the neck down, Commissioner Bartels returned to Colby College and earned a bachelor's degree in physics and then a master's from Tufts University. He worked in the nuclear science lab at MIT and in 1968 joined Honeywell Information Systems. Although he rose to become a department manager, he answered the call of public service when in 1977 Gov. Michael Dukakis asked him to serve as Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commissioner. Through three governors and five administrations, Commissioner Bartels has served the people of the Commonwealth, becoming a national figure in the area of technology and adaptive devices for people with disabilities.

On November 16, the National Spinal Cord Injury Association, of which he is a founding member, will create an award in his name. The Elmer C. Bartels Leadership Recognition Award, to be bestowed on an individual with a disability who has been a leader in the disability community for at least 15 years, will be lasting testimony not only to Mr. Bartels' achievements, but also to the cause that he has dedicated so much of his life to serving.

Elmer Bartels is an example of hope and courage and achievement in the face of tremendous odds, not only to those with disabilities whom he has benefited so greatly over the years, but to all of us who have worked with him. I want to extend to him my congratulations on this very fitting tribute and wish him a long and productive career.•

HON. ARTHUR M. CROMARTY

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am proud to stand here today to honor outgoing Administrative Judge Arthur M. Cromarty. Judge Cromarty has spent 40 years in public service, including 25 years on the bench as justice of the supreme court and 18 years as district administrative judge of Suffolk County.

Arthur Cromarty was born in Brooklyn, NY, on July 3, 1919. He received a B.S. degree from the University of Alabama and served in the U.S. Air Force during World War II as a captain. Arthur received the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal, and three clusters, 1943-45. He received his juris doctor degree from St. Johns University Law School in 1948.

He married Ellin Hirsch and had three children, Alice—Mrs. Emory Herrick—Ross, and Peter. He is a member of many civic, fraternal, and professional organizations. He is a recipient of many special awards from various religious, civic, and fraternal organizations, including 1986 Judge of the Year Award from the Catholic Lawyer's Guild.

The Honorable Arthur M. Cromarty has had a distinguished career and has given of himself freely to New York and to the United States of America. It is indeed an honor to pay tribute to this exemplary man.•

OIL WELL FIRES IN KUWAIT

• Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I spoke yesterday about the wonderful news that the last oil-well fire had been extinguished in Kuwait. I personally thanked the three American companies and one Canadian firm for their extraordinary efforts in fighting the fires.

I would also like to commend the efforts of two additional American companies who played a major role in the firefighting effort: Santa Fe International of Alhambra, CA, and Bechtel Group, Inc. of San Francisco. The logistics of supplying massive amounts of equipment and materials was a herculean task. Without the tremendous support of these two fine organizations, the fires may well have continued to burn for many more weeks, if not months. As chairman of the Gulf Pollution Task Force, I would like to thank Santa Fe and Bechtel for their contributions toward resolving this environmental nightmare.•

PHYSICAL EDUCATION, RECREATION, AND DANCE NEW YORK CITYWIDE CONFERENCE

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to bring your attention to a citywide physical education, recreation, and dance professional conference which will be held on Saturday, December 7, 1991, from 8:30 a.m.–2 p.m. at Murray Bergtraum High School in Manhattan.

Physical education, recreation, and dance are an essential element in the overall fitness and development of our youth. It is only fitting that we pay tribute to the generous and caring individuals who donate their time and energy to support sports and dance activities for our youth.

The New York State Association for Health, Physical Education, Recreation, and Dance, Inc., is composed of educators and professionals who are dedicated to the advancement of their respective fields. They are actively concerned with expanding the capabilities of its members and promoting quality curricula for better education. It is also the New York State leader in providing extensive professional and educational growth opportunities.

The main goal of the conference is to provide workshops that will impart new, innovative, and informative ideas that can and will be brought back to the classroom. This is a worthwhile goal and I salute the association members for all of their efforts, during this conference and throughout the years.•

TRIBUTE TO PEARL HARBOR SURVIVORS

• Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to the Connecticut Chapter of the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association. Mr. President, 2 years ago Congress passed legislation introduced on behalf of members of the Armed Forces present on December 7, 1941, during the attack on Pearl Harbor. In doing so, Congress authorized the awarding of the Pearl Harbor Commemorative Medal. On Sunday, in my home State of Connecticut, the Connecticut Chapter of the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association is holding its awards ceremony for the purpose of presenting these medals to the veterans of the attack on Pearl Harbor.

Mr. President, the 50th anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor is less than a month away. Despite the passage of nearly half of a century, the memories of that day live on in all of us. We owe the veterans of the Pearl Harbor attack a great deal for their commitment to national security, their belief in American values, and their willingness to make the ultimate sacrifice for their country. This commemorative medal represents our gratitude and respect for these special individuals. It is my fervent hope that the recipients of this medal feel the pride of Connecticut and that of the entire Nation.•

NOTICE OF DETERMINATION BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS UNDER RULE 35, PARAGRAPH 4, PERMITTING ACCEPTANCE OF A GIFT OF EDUCATIONAL TRAVEL FROM A FOREIGN ORGANIZATION

• Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD notices of Senate employees who participate in programs, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Brad Figel, a member of the staff of Senator PACKWOOD, to participate in a program in China sponsored by the United States-Asia Foundation on November 30 to December 15, 1991.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Nigel in this program, at the expense of the United States-Asia Foundation is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.•

GATES NOMINATION

• Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the nomination of Robert Gates to be Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mr. President, at the outset of the confirmation hearings, I had serious reservations about the nominee. The confirmation hearings only raised more questions and greater doubts. Questions and doubts about Mr. Gates' past activities, managerial style, judgment, lapses in memory and analytical abilities. Questions and doubts about his role in the Iran-Contra Affair and in providing military intelligence to Iraq during the Iran-Iraq war; and questions and doubts about whether he will be able to remove the ideological blinders reflected in his writings and speeches or whether Mr. Gates is so rooted in the past, that he will not be able to lead the Agency into the post-cold war era. Because of these concerns, I have concluded that Mr. Gates is not the right person for the important job of overseeing our intelligence operations in this New World.

Mr. President, Robert Gates is a career Soviet analyst and former Deputy Director of the CIA who was wrong about what CIA analyst Harold Ford described as "the central analytic target of the past few years: the probable fortunes of the USSR and the Soviet European bloc." And I believe that the committee report points out one possible reason why the CIA failed to predict the collapse of the Soviet Union. According to testimony, Mr. Gates was busy pursuing hypotheses and making unsubstantiated arguments attempting to show Soviet expansion in the Third World, instead of looking for or paying attention to facts that pointed in the opposite direction. Why? Why, as Mentor MOYNIHAN has pointed out, was the CIA able to tell Presidents everything about the Soviet Union except the fact that it was falling apart?

Mr. Gates was also wrong about the Soviet threat to Iran in 1985. The 1985 Special National Intelligence Estimate on Iran stressed possible Soviet inroads into Iran. Gates admits that the analysis was an anomaly. It was a clear departure from previous analyses and almost immediately proven wrong by subsequent events. Gates was involved in preparing that analysis. According to Hal Ford, whose testimony the nominee never refuted, Gates leaned heavily on the Iran Estimate, in effect, "insisting on his own views and discouraging dissent." What was the result? The 1985 estimate was skewed and contributed to the biggest foreign policy debacle of the Reagan administration, the sale of arms to Iran.

Mr. President, Graham Fuller, the CIA's National Intelligence Officer for the Near East, suggested that the 1985 SNIE estimate was based on intuition in the absence of hard evidence. I agree there is nothing wrong with preparing worse case scenarios or using "intuition" as opposed to hard evidence in the preparation of analysis, provided it is made clear to policymakers that the finished analysis is based on intuition and not hard evidence. It is the job of the CIA to sort out fact from fiction, not convert one into the other.

Mr. President, I also have doubts and questions about Mr. Gates' role in the secret intelligence sharing operation with Iraq. Robert Gates served as assistant to the Director of the CIA in 1981 and as Deputy Director for Intelligence from 1982 to 1986. In that capacity he helped develop options in dealing with the Iran-Iraq war, which eventually involved into a secret intelligence liaison relationship with Saddam Hussein's Iraq. Gates was in charge of the directorate that prepared the intelligence information that was passed on to Iraq. He testified that he was also an active participant in the operation during 1986. The secret intelligence sharing operation with Iraq was not only a highly questionable and possibly illegal operation, but also may have jeopardized American lives and our national interests. The photo reconnaissance, highly sensitive electronic eavesdropping and narrative texts provided to Saddam, may not only have helped him in Iraq's war against Iran but also in the recent gulf war. Saddam Hussein may have discovered the value of underground land lines as opposed to radio communications after he was given our intelligence information. That made it more difficult for the allied coalition to get quick and accurate intelligence during the gulf war. Further, after the Persian Gulf war, our intelligence community was surprised at the extent of Iraq's nuclear program. One reason Saddam may have hidden his nuclear program so effectively from detection was because of his knowledge of our satellite photos. What also concerns me about that operation is that we spend millions of dollars keeping secrets from the Soviets and then we give it to Saddam who sells them to the Soviets. In short, the coddling of Saddam was a mistake of the first order.

Mr. President, I've stated a very simple case for rejecting the nomination of Robert Gates to be Director of the CIA. The fact that he was wrong on major issues which in some instances led to foreign policy debacles. I haven't addressed concerns about the allegations of his politicization of intelligence analysis, his apparently poor managerial style or still unanswered questions about his role in the Iran-Contra affair. Regarding the Iran-Contra affair, I should mention that I was quite disturbed to hear testimony that portrayed Robert Gates as someone concerned about Agency's role and not sufficiently concerned about pursuing possible illegal Government activities. In his opening statement before the Intelligence Committee, Mr. Gates said that he should have taken more seriously "the possibility of impropriety or possible wrongdoing in the Government and pursued this possibility more aggressively." I agree.

I should also mention, Mr. President, that aside from Mr. Gates' poor judgment in not pursuing the possibility of Government wrongdoing more aggressively, I still find it incredible that the Deputy Director of CIA was not aware of that major covert operation. How could such a high ranking official not know about the CIA's efforts to support the Contras? Did he purposely avoid trying to find out what was happening? The testimony seemed to indicate he did. Gates' selective lapses in recall about the affair by a man with a photographic memory raises serious doubts.

The U.S. Congress and the American people depend on accurate and reliable intelligence information. Our expenditures on defense and other areas are often decided on the basis of that information. We cannot afford to waste billion of dollars in the future. After reviewing the record, I do not believe that the Central Intelligence Agency under the directorship of Robert Gates will provide the clear intelligence assessments necessary for Congress to make decisions to deal with the future threats confronting our nation.

Mr. President, I do not believe that Robert Gates is the right person to lead the CIA at this time. The cold war is over and it's time for some of the old warriors to rest. Now we must take a fresh new look at the world, think new thoughts and reassess the future role of the intelligence community. I urge my colleagues to vote against Robert Gates.•

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2707, THE FISCAL YEAR 1992 LABOR-HHS APPROPRIATIONS BILL

• Mr. KERREY Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the conference report on the fiscal year 1992 Labor-HHS appropriations bill which includes funding for many critically needed health and education programs.

In particular, I am very pleased that the conference report includes the provision overturning the administration's 1988 gag rule regulations.

On May 23, 1991, the Supreme Court, dominated by Reagan and Bush appointees, upheld the constitutionality of the 1988 regulations which prohibit doctors, nurses, or other health care professionals working in family planning clinics receiving title X Federal funds from providing any information concerning abortion, even when such information is specifically requested by a pregnant woman. The fiscal year 1992 Labor-HHS appropriations bill fortunately includes language that would keep these regulations from being implemented during the 1992 fiscal year.

I spoke out strongly against the Rust versus Sullivan decision when it was issued, and I do so again today. The Federal Government should not be in the business of denying women access to information on all their legal medical options.

Mr. President, the 1973 Supreme Court decision, Roe versus Wade, established the basis for a limited right to a legal abortion. Although a minority of Americans want this legal precedent overturned, a majority does not. It comes as close as possible to expressing the will of the American people on an extremely difficult moral issue.

Our personal ideological and moral principles should guide us in making decisions according to the specific constraints of this ruling. We should not use government to coerce Americans' decisions, unless there is a compelling health and safety reason to do so.

The November 6 Washington Post reports that the administration has circulated a memorandum from President Bush to Secretary of Health and Human Services Sullivan which addressed the criticism that the rule would interfere with the doctor-patient relationship and would deny women their constitutional right to full information about family planning alternatives. The Post reports that the memo stated: "We must ensure that the confidentiality of the doctor-patient relationship will be preserved and that the operation of the title X family planning program is compatible with free speech and the highest standards of medical care."

I could not agree more. If the President truly believes what he stated in his memo, then he should prove it by signing the Labor-HHS appropriations bill with the provision rejecting the legal interpretation by the Supreme Court and guaranteeing that all women will continue to have information on all their medical options.•

PLAYGROUND SAFETY

• Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, as my colleagues know, I have long advocated the value of investing in our human infrastructure, especially as it relates to prevention. As chairman of the Labor, HHS, and Education Subcommittees, I have a particular interest in any efforts to safeguard the well-being of this Nation's greatest resource—our children.

As a society, we all bear some responsibility for ensuring that our children are allowed to grow and develop in the safest possible environment. Yet, according to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, last year almost a quarter of a million children under age 15 were treated in hospital emergency rooms for injuries sustained on our country's playgrounds. Injuries that occurred on swings or other playground equipment.

Mr. President, I think we all recognize the physical and social benefits that playgrounds have to offer our children. But it is very troubling to learn that playgrounds can also pose a serious threat to children's safety.

Mr. President, according to the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, some of the injuries that occur in the playground setting can be prevented by paying greater attention to playground design and maintenance, as well as by closer adult supervision.

Recognizing that an ounce of prevention can substantially reduce the number of injuries to children, the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons has launched a national public education program—called Play It Safe—to increase public awareness of the problem and to call attention to the guidelines of the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission.

While orthopaedic surgeons treat a variety of injuries to children and adults, it is important to note that they are also interested in prevention of injuries. I wish to commend the academy for its efforts in this important area. I also want to urge my colleagues to obtain the brochure "Play It Safe: A Guide to Playground Safety," developed by the orthopaedic surgeons, and share it with your constituents.•

ALEX SCHOENBAUM TRIBUTE

• Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding individual and a man who has been a personal friend of mine for many years—Alex Schoenbaum.

On November 21, 1991, the American Jewish Committee's Institute of Human Relations will pay tribute to Alex Schoenbaum by presenting him with the Sarasota—South Central Florida 1991 Human Relations Award. I can confidently state, without a doubt, that there is not a more deserving individual.

Alex founded Shoney's restaurants, beginning under the name Parkette, in 1947 in Charleston, WV. The name was changed to Shoney's in 1951. In the fifties, Shoney's was "the" gathering place for many Charleston teenagers and before long, that one small drive-in became one of the largest restaurant chains on the east coast.

It was Alex Schoenbaum's strength, determination, and good business sense that turned Shoney's into the enormous success it has enjoyed. But it is his humanity that defines the kind of man he is. He cares a great deal about people. He's always been particularly concerned about the needs of young people, providing thousands with jobs and opportunities through his business.

Alex has always been a philanthropist, and has several programs set up to help people who are in need of assistance. One program, the Schoenbaum Foundation, helps those that are less fortunate in the States of West Virginia and Florida. Another is the Manna-Meal Program, which donates food to the homeless or underprivileged. As an example of his enormous love for the State of West Virginia, Alex established an educational scholarship program at both West Virginia University and the University of Charleston. The scholarship awards 1 year's tuition fees to students in education, in exchange for 1 year of teaching in West Virginia. A similar program also exists in the State of Ohio.

Alex Schoenbaum is dedicated to the improvement of life and the advancement of human character. Although some may view his deeds as transcendent of human kindness, to him it is just a way of life.

I have tremendous respect for Alex Schoenbaum, and I am proud to call him my friend.•

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ATTACK ON PEARL HARBOR

• Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, December 7, 1991, marks the 50th anniversary of the "date that will live in infamy." On Sunday, December 7, 1941, America was thrown into the horrors of war by the surprise attack upon American military installations at Pearl Harbor launched by the Japanese Imperial Navy and Air Force. The American military defended their bases bravely, but were caught off guard and could do little against the sizable Japanese offensive force.

The attack on Pearl Harbor left 2,403 Americans dead and 1,178 wounded. It was the only time in the 20th century that U.S. territory was ever attacked. The assault came as a shock to our Nation and jolted our country out of its self-imposed isolation into the position of world leadership which it still holds today.

One day after Pearl Harbor was attacked, the United States Congress met in joint session as President Franklin Delano Roosevelt asked for a declaration of war against Japan. After his address, the Senate retired to its Chamber for immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 116, the formal declaration of war. One of my predecessors representing Michigan in the U.S. Senate, Arthur Hendrick Vandenberg, rose after the resolution had been read. He spoke briefly on the declaration of war. I would like to quote from the final paragraph of his heartfelt comments, as I believe his eloquent words captured the determination of the American people that day:

> Mr. President, I am constrained to make this brief statement on my own account, lest there be any lingering misapprehension in any furtive mind that previous internal disagreements regarding the wisdom of our policies may encourage the despicable hope that we may weaken from within. I have fought every trend which I thought would lead to needless war; but when war comes to us—and particularly when it comes like a thug in the night—I stand with my Commander in Chief for the swiftest and most invincible reply of which our total strength may be capable. It is too late to argue why we face this hazard. The record stands. The historians can settle this conundrum upon another day, when we have finished with this task. For now, it is enough that the attack has come. For now, nothing will be enough except an answer from 130,000,000 united people that will tell this whole round earth that though America still hates war, America fights when she is violated. And fights until victory is conclusive. God helping her, she can do no other.

We must never forget Pearl Harbor. As an original cosponsor of legislation designating December 7, 1991, as "National Pearl Harbor Remembrance Day," I believe that it is important to honor the veterans of that attack. They survived that terrible assault, and with the battle cry of "Remember Pearl Harbor," helped lead the United States to victory in World War II. Our Nation turned a corner that fateful December day. While I know that Americans will never hesitate to defend our country from aggression, I pray that we will never have cause to do battle on such a massive scale ever again.•

THE 1991 CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL FOR SOVIET JEWRY

• Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, once again this session, I rise to speak on behalf of the Congressional Call to Conscience Vigil for Soviet Jews. I regret that the number of cases of Soviet refuseniks still outstanding requires Members of both the House and Senate to repeatedly come to the floor to make these remarks on their behalf. It is truly unfortunate that we must mark another year with these statements to call attention to the continued difficulties faced by Soviet Jews who wish to emigrate.

The last time I stood here I spoke of Mrs. Alla Iosifovna Makavoz, the mother of David Makavoz, a Seattle resident. Mrs. Makavoz is battling breast cancer and was trying to get out of the Soviet Union to receive treatment. Three days ago Mrs. Makavoz landed in Seattle to be reunited with her family and to receive the advanced treatment for breast cancer she needs so desperately.

For every Mrs. Makavoz, however, there are hundreds of other Soviet Jews trying to get out. The Soviet Union is going through tremendous upheaval. The radical economic reforms being instituted in the Republics will bring tremendous hardship and change. I am concerned that these difficulties may well result in an increase of anti-Semitic incidents, as we have seen before. With the new freedom of expression in the Soviet Union has come greater openness and publicity for extreme nationalist groups like Pamyat to spread their anti-Semitic message of hate and violence. Soviet Jews must be allowed to emigrate now, before these attacks reach the critical levels of the past.

Mrs. Makavoz' release from the Soviet Union is just the beginning of the kind of emigration that needs to happen in the next year. While major reforms are occurring in what was the Soviet Union, and the Government claims to have improved its emigration policies, there are still hundreds of thousands of Jews waiting to get out and thousands of longstanding refusenik cases pending. I cannot express my concern enough. We must get these people out, and we must do it now.

Today, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the case of Igor Bondarev, a civil engineer who lives in Moscow with his wife and child and who first applied for emigration for himself and his family in 1979. The Government refused to grant Igor an emigration visa because his mother, who is a committed Communist and very poor, does not want him to leave. Mr. Bondarev would like to take his mother with him to Israel, but she does not want to go. The Soviet emigration law still contains a clause which allows parents, no matter how old the child is, to keep their children from emigrating. This practice must be stopped. The Soviet Union committed itself to reforming its emigration laws, but it still maintains the right to refuse visas to those whose parents will not allow them to leave and to those who are considered security risks because, at one point in their working lives, they had something to do with defense, State, transportation, or energy enterprise. Mr. Bondarev's case is a good example of the obstacles that refuseniks still face in their quest to leave the Soviet Union.

Though thousands have been able to leave the Soviet Union, there are indications that, given the current confusion over the powers of the Central Government and the powers of the Republics, the lack of a functioning legal system in the Soviet Union will continue to delay the exit of these refuseniks. As the Soviet Republics embrace their new-found spirit of democracy they must allow those who wish to emigrate the opportunity to do so. Igor Bondarev and his family have been waiting for 13 years to get out of the Soviet Union. How much longer can we expect him to wait? It is my sincere hope that Mr. Bondarev and his family will be allowed to emigrate soon and that the thousands of other Soviet Jews waiting to emigrate will be allowed to do so, and to do so immediately.•

VETERANS DAY

• Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, on November 11, America will celebrate Veterans Day. On this special day, we honor those Americans who have made profound sacrifices in order to keep our country a free and democratic nation. This year, however, our observance of Veterans Day bears extra significance as we formally recognize those Americans who served in the Persian Gulf war.

America is very proud of the troops who served in the gulf. As Americans, our support for these courageous men and women remains true and unwavering. To show our appreciation for their sacrifice, the U.S. Congress extended veterans benefits to those who served in the gulf war. Hopefully, this will help smooth their transition back to civilian life.

As we honor all of America's veterans, I can't help but reflect on the history and evolution of this day. It has been several generations since President Woodrow Wilson proclaimed Armistice Day to commemorate the peace between the Allies and central powers that ended the fighting of the "war to end wars." Tragically, World War I did not end all wars, as Americans who had fought in that war had hoped. That dream was overcome by events—only 20 years later the world once again took up arms. And, once again, Americans were there to fight for the values we hold close to our hearts. Following World War II, President Eisenhower formally changed the name of Armistice Day to Veterans Day, in recognition of those who had fought so valiantly for our Nation.

On a day devoted to our veterans, let us not forget those who remain missing and unaccounted for in the wake of the war in Southeast Asia. More than 15 years after the United States departed Vietnam, the fate of more than 2,000 American service personnel remains unresolved. Let us take time on this day to renew our commitment to finding a solution to this national tragedy.

As our World War II and Korean war veteran population ages, we must be sure that our VA medical facilities are equipped to meet the special needs of these veterans. In Michigan, efforts are in progress to ensure that this fundamental requirement is met. The recent ground breakings for the construction of a new VA hospital in Detroit and for a 120-bed nursing home addition at the Saginaw VA Medical Center are just two examples of the efforts underway to meet that growing need. And, as the new outpatient clinic nears completion in Grand Rapids, MI veterans can be assured that the entire State will move into the 21st century with modern veterans facilities. Finally, we must ensure that the VA medical care budget is not reduced. Today, I added my name to a letter to President Bush signed by more than 20 Senators which expresses strong support for increased funding for VA medical care and health related research.

Veterans Day means many things to all of us. It is a reflection of the pride we share in the men and women who have kept our Nation free and strong. It is an indication of the deep respect we hold for those who have risked their lives for American democracy. On this Veterans Day, let us express our sincere thanks to our fellow Americans who valiantly served abroad in the U.S. Armed Forces.•

TRIBUTE TO SURVIVORS OF PEARL HARBOR

• Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the memory of those who lost their lives during the attack on Pearl Harbor, and to pay tribute to the men and women who survived.

On Veterans Day, 1941, Americans reflected upon what they believed was the war to end all wars—World War I. Less than a month later, without warning, on December 7, 1941, the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor. In a matter of hours, 2,403 Americans had died and 1,178 were wounded.

The response of the American people was immediate. We were horrified and outraged over this unprovoked assault, and we were ready to retaliate. We threw our support behind the Allies, fighting against Hitler and Mussolini in Europe and the desert, and the Emperor of Japan in the Pacific.

We fought World War II for a multitude of reasons: to defeat fascism, to prevent unchecked aggression, and to halt the murder of millions of Jews. We also fought World War II for the men and women of Pearl Harbor.

We hoped World War II would be our final conflict, but unfortunately the United States has been involved in a number of battles around the globe. Every generation has sadly added loved ones names to the roll of those we honor on Veterans Day. Recent events in the Persian Gulf forced us to, once again, look directly into the eyes of a dictator. Fifty years later we did, in fact, remember Pearl Harbor. We remembered Pearl Harbor in the most fitting manner possible—we avoided a similar disaster. This time we were not caught short and unprepared. This time we did not bury our heads in the sand; instead, we drew a line in it and stood fast.

Mr. President, I rise today to honor and thank all veterans. As we commemorate the 50th anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor and pay tribute to the survivors of this conflict, we are reminded of the contribution all veterans have played in the defense of our country. We should not only remember those who perished, but those who survived. Veterans continue to keep our Nation free, and for this we owe them our lives, our liberty, and our freedom.•

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the distinguished Republican leader and I, and others, have today discussed on several occasions the status of the unemployment insurance matter. I have previously, with other Democratic Senators, announced our intention to introduce a bill today, which we will do today prior to the close of business, and which we will be addressing in the near future.

I understand that the distinguished Republican leader wishes to address that subject now and, therefore, I will momentarily yield the floor and state that I look forward to continuing our discussions with him, and I hope that we are going to be able to bring this matter to a successful, satisfactory conclusion in the near future.

I will be, later this afternoon, shortly, when we get the bill ready, introducing that bill and having a statement on it at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

BANK CARD RATES DEFY ECONOMIC GRAVITY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it is no secret that America is searching for ways to increase consumer confidence and to build a strong economic recovery.

The Federal Reserve Board helped in this search by cutting the discount rate to 4.5 percent—the lowest rate since January 1973.

In turn, many banks are helping out by cutting their prime rate to 7.5 percent, less than half of the 1981 average prime rate of 19 percent.

One group, however, seems reluctant to do their part, and I am hearing from an increasing number of Americans who are wondering "why?"

Why, despite the drops in discount and prime rates, does the average bankcard interest rate remain at 18.9 percent—higher than the 18.5 percent rate of 1981.

Why are far too many of the 97 million Americans who have a credit card stuck with paying these staggering interest rates?

The banks cite many reasons—including the need to make a profit, and rising delinquencies and bankruptcies—for the fact that credit card rates always go up—completely defying the laws of economic gravity.

Let there be no doubt that I am completely in favor of businesses making a profit, but I would point to numbers from the bankcard holders of America, stating that the ratio of bad debts to credit card receivables is much lower now—2.9 percent—than it was in 1981, when it was 5.1 percent.

I would also point to the fact that many bankcards almost invite bad debts by blanketing the Nation with credit applications, without regard to an individual's creditworthiness.

Banks also contend that the credit card market is competitive, and that consumers are free to shop for better deals. There are 6,000 different financial institutions issuing bankcards nationwide, with interest rates ranging from 10.5 percent to 24 percent, and I would certainly urge consumers to shop around and find the best deal.

All I want to do this evening—and Senator DOMENICI and I might have something else to say on this subject next week—is to suggest that the bankcard companies should make it a little bit easier for consumers to find that fair deal.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE EXTENDED BENEFITS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on the matter of unemployment insurance extended benefits, I might say there have been a lot of discussions about unemployment and extended benefits for the past several weeks—in fact, since on or about August, September.

Some have suggested that President Bush does not care or does not have a plan of his own. I would just for the record—not for any partisan debate—point out that the President has been willing to sign our proposal 3 months ago because it paid for itself.

There have been lots of discussions. We sent it down to the President twice. It has been vetoed twice, and the veto has been sustained in the Senate twice.

I think there is a growing consensus now across the board, across this spectrum, across party lines, that we ought to get together, work out a plan, a plan that President Bush will sign, something that pays for itself, and something that gets the checks flowing to the unemployed workers in Nevada, Kansas, Mississippi, wherever they may be.

So it is my hope that by next weekend that will happen and it will happen if we can come together and drop the politics on each side, get down to work, and try to find some common ground.

Today, the majority leader, Senator BENTSEN, and others offered their proposal—another proposal. It would cut foreign aid. We are still studying that proposal. We do not have the language yet. It has not been introduced. But we will be studying that over the weekend.

Certainly, cutting foreign aid is very popular. Most Americans like to cut foreign aid, but I am not certain yet whether all countries are treated alike or whether exceptions are made for some that may have more influence or whether we are saying to the American people, well, we treat some foreign countries better than other foreign countries, we treat some foreign countries better than Americans.

That is what the American people are disturbed about. They say we spend too much money abroad, too much time focusing on foreign events and problems in countries like that.

So we want to make certain that no country is singled out for special treatment. Let us treat everybody alike. We treat all Americans alike. So if we go down the road, if we are going to make exceptions for this country, that country, then I think we have a problem.

Also, I understand, based on a very cursory review of the Democrat's plan, they depend on a declaration of an emergency because the bill itself does not pay for itself each year. So it would be in violation of the budget agreement.

It is also our understanding that the bill still uses what we call the total unemployment rates so that students and teachers on summer vacation and people who voluntarily leave their jobs will be included in the count.

We do not think that is a fair way to approach this issue. We have some suggestions. We hope they will be looked at carefully. The majority leader indicated certainly he is willing to look at suggestions for improvement.

So I would just suggest we do not want to do anything but try to work something out. We also have to keep in mind that a bill like this should originate in the House. I know that the House Republicans and House Democrats do not like the cafeteria approach.

Under the Democratic plan you have three choices: You can declare an emergency, you can freeze or reduce foreign aid, or you can pay for it in other ways that we are working on—by speeding up collection of income taxes and extending certain provisions that applied to student loans.

It is my understanding that generally on the House side, in both parties, they believe that that is not an appropriate approach. I must say I confess I had that suggestion in debating earlier on this floor the last time around that maybe we ought to put the Democratic package and Republican package together, send it to the White House, and let the President make his choice so we get checks in the mail.

So I am not suggesting it is a bad idea because it was not a bad idea when I suggested it. I am suggesting my understanding the House side prefers to have one bill, and if we are going to do anything, if we have to send the President two options, they ought to be in separate bills, not just one package.

So I would suggest that we ought to agree to a single approach, not sort of government by multiple choice. And we ought to start negotiating. I know there is a desire on the other side of the aisle not to change anything in the original Bentsen benefit package.

Now, it seems to me that if there is no-give there, then we may have some difficulty.

In the final analysis, we are going to be able to do this and do it the way we should do it if we can beat off all amendments that might have some impact. But I am not certain we can do that until we can have some agreement, some bipartisan agreement, agreement on both sides of the aisle, that this is the package we agree to.

In fact, the President called me today. There was some allusion earlier, some criticism. The President happened to be in a very important NATO meeting in Rome. If he were not there, he would be criticized. He is there. It is very important for the United States when we look at the future defense of the world, future defense spending, and it is very important the President be where he is today. But one of my colleagues was taking a cheap shot at the President of the United States, saying, well, he is in Rome today.

The President called me, notwithstanding the duties he is undertaking for all Americans and freedom-loving people around the world, to ask me about the unemployment bill—whether we were making any progress, whether I thought we could work something out.

I want to point that out, because he has been following it almost on an hour-by-hour basis since he left here yesterday morning. So there is an interest all around, it seems to me, at this point: Republicans, Democrats, House, Senate, the executive branch.

I also want to thank Mr. Darman, the OMB Director. He has been in my office nearly all day, along with the Treasury Secretary. They have been meeting in my office. They have been meeting in Congressman MICHEL'S office, the Republican leader of the House. They met with Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee, Republican members of the Senate Finance Committee. Mr. Darman met with Senator BENTSEN earlier today.

The point I would make is it seems to me we are finally getting a little consensus here that we ought to get this done. And you never get everything you want. This side will not get all we want. On the other side, they will not get all they want. But the bottom line is we want to get the checks out to the American men and women who are unemployed. We believe the sooner we can do that, the better.

But keep in mind one more thing. If the House has a different idea and if the House originates the bill, then I think we should watch very carefully what Congressman MICHEL, the Republican leader, and Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI of the House Ways and Means Committee, may originate. It will be interesting what they do in the next few days.

It would also be my hope that key staff would work on some of the problems we are going to find in some of these approaches over the weekend, so when we come back here on Tuesday we are going to be in a position to start moving the bill forward and not start on next Tuesday trying to work out some differences and to go on into the next week.

So it is my hope, working with the majority leader, with the chairman of the Finance Committee, the ranking Republican on that committee, Senator PACKWOOD, and other members on this committee and other Members on each side of the aisle—and I would say particularly those on this side of the aisle, those who stuck with us on vetoes—to get a good bill that will be beneficial to all unemployed men and women in America.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, first I want to thank the distinguished Republican leader for the comments he has been making about the unemployment benefits extension. This matter has gone on far too long. There are people in my State of Mississippi and in Kansas and other States that do need these extended benefits. So I am pleased to see that there is activity going on now across the aisle in an effort to try and find a proper solution.

There is no doubt in my mind the President is interested in this and wants to find a solution. It is time that any politics which may have been played with this issue be put aside. In fact, it is overdue. I am pleased the President is forcing this issue. I am pleased that we are looking for other solutions to try to solve this problem.

But the solution is not to use this as an opportunity to break the budget. While it is perfectly all right with me to take foreign aid to pay for unemployment extensions, I have looked at what I understand may be in this new package and it is not real money, I am afraid. I am afraid the savings would not be there in the foreign aid area to actually pay for the extension of these unemployment benefits. But, I am willing to look at that.

I would much prefer that we go with the proposal that our distinguished Republican leader developed earlier, a process to pay for it. The Senator from Texas, Senator BENTSEN, has had a proposal. Maybe a combination of the two. But something real to pay for this. And let us get this job done.

Anybody that wants to say, "Oh, the President has not been properly responsive in dealing with this," let me assure you if we will send a package to him, a reasonable package that will get the job done that is paid for, he will sign it Monday morning, or as soon as he gets access to it.

I think it is time we do this job and I would urge the leaders on both sides of the aisle to quit playing around with this thing and let us get it done so that the people that need help can get it.

DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I feel that the Armed Services Committees, House and Senate, and the conferees did a pretty good job in developing the conference that we probably will be considering next week. It has not been finally completed, but we are down to the final sections that are in debate. It is not a conference report that I am perfectly happy with because, quite frankly, it has too many cuts in it. We are trying to comply with the budget that will require us to reduce defense spending by 25 percent over the next few years. The money in this bill for shipbuilding is not as much as I would like for it to be.

There are cutbacks in ships. There are cutbacks in personnel. We are reducing spending overseas. There are base closures. And all of these reductions are having an impact.

I think one of the problems with the economy right now is that we put 85,000 military and civilian employees of the Department of Defense out into the economy. Now they are out there looking for jobs. You cannot take jobs, you cannot close down bases, and expect it not to have an impact on the economy of this country. But we are doing what we agreed to do.

I am particularly pleased with what this bill does in the Strategic Defense Initiative area. I think that the chairman of our committee, Senator NUNN of Georgia, should be commended for the work that he has done, and our ranking member from Virginia, Senator WARNER. They worked very hard at reaching the SDI agreement as well as other provisions of the bill.

But there is one provision that we are still considering that I think is a great big mistake. The military budget is not this great big bucket of gold from which we can all begin to dip for money to spend on other programs that we would like to advocate. We should not set up a process whereby we can take a billion dollars of the American taxpayer's money from defense of our own country and say it can be spent in the Soviet Union. Before I get into specifics I want to make it clear my main objection is to the whole concept of using defense dollars to aid the Soviets. If you get into the details, you can say, well, maybe you could justify some money here, maybe you could justify some of that. But we need to be thinking about what we are doing here.

This is another dip out of the defense budget, a billion dollars. But this time it is for the Soviet Union. Do the American people want that? If we are going to reduce our defense spending, would they not prefer that it be spent someplace else? Could we not spend it on health care in America or for unemployment benefits or for retraining of Americans? There are so many programs in America that could certainly make better use of the money.

What about this democracy dividend that we have talked about? If we decide we do not need to spend this money for defense, let us return it back to the American people in the form of middle-income tax cuts. We have been talking about that. There are many, many things we could be doing with this money that I think would be much better than aid to the Soviet Union.

But I will tell you, talking about the politics of it, I urge my colleagues to stop and think about going back home, wherever it may be in America, and defending a decision to take a billion dollars out of our defense budget and spend it in the Soviet Union for any purpose. Be careful. Make sure you realize that the Soviet Union is still spending astronomical amounts of money for defense in their country. They continue to build the next generation of military weapons—nuclear weapons.

I do not understand. We are going to take our defense money and spend it in the Soviet Union to help them while they are taking their own defense money and building the next generation of weapons? That is insanity.

Mr. President, this is a public relations disaster. I urge the conferees on both sides of this building: Drop this provision. It is bad idea. It is a bad policy. It is bad politics. It has not been properly thought out. There are too many questions involved. If we are going to do this, let us do it headon. Just face it right up front and say, "Look, we are going to provide funds."

If we want to provide food aid for the Soviet Union in this difficult winter, I am very ready to be helpful. I have already voted for that once, in the form of grain. But this approach has all kinds of problems. We have not really had a chance to consider the specifics of this proposal.

Many Members of the Senate Armed Services Committee did not even see it until 8 o'clock last Thursday night. And when we started asking questions, we found a lot of problems that concerned us.

Once again, I would want to make absolutely sure that before we start spending money from our defense bill in the Soviet Union, that we make sure that the republics—many that they are now, and with a questionable common bond—are actually reducing their nuclear threat to America; that they are not spending as much money on their own military weapons.

Let us have some tightening up of this provision's preamble to guarantee that they are not spending money on destructive weapons while we are giving aid to feed them or to retrain their military troops. So that is the first thing I think we have to be very careful about.

My next problem: It says in order to determine where we would spend this money, we need a blue ribbon panel consisting of government, business, and academic experts. Another panel; great. That is all we need. Another committee; that will solve the problem.

But it does not say who goes on this panel or how they are selected or who they would answer to. So I would have a lot of questions about that particular provision.

Also, this would provide that money could go for humanitarian aid. It could go for retraining Soviet military officers. How can we fund a grand unemployment and retraining plan for the Soviet military, when we are not doing it for American military people losing their job? This says the President shall obtain the assurances of the Soviet Government that the fissionable materials and other components of nuclear weapons be destroyed pursuant to that program; that they will not be reused in new nuclear weapons.

That is pretty broad and pretty mild, in my opinion. I would want some greater guarantee as to what is going to happen with these nuclear devices that might be taken down.

If we can limit this in some way, only to maybe technically assisting the Soviet in the dismantling of their nuclear weapons, then we ought to consider it. But I would want to know where the money is going to come from, and who is going to make that decision. And I would want to know once again what are the Soviets doing to help themselves.

There is a provision in here that says we are going to help the Soviet Union with environmental cleanup. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, I can tell you this: We are closing bases in America where it is going to take hundreds of millions—even billions—of dollars for environmental cleanup, and the money is not there. It is not there.

I want you to explain to our citizens in Indiana, Ohio, Louisiana—wherever it may be—that we are closing your base and oh, by the way, you have environmental problems, but gee, we are sorry, we do not have the money. And maybe we do not have the money because we are helping the Soviets with their environmental cleanup.

Mr. President, where are our priorities? This is crazy. At least let us make sure we understand what we are agreeing to before we go forward with this particular program.

There are too many questions I have about this proposal. I am not questioning the leadership on our committee. They were having to deal with the proposal that came from the other body.

Many people in this city and across America, including the Secretary of Defense, said when this idea was suggested it was a harebrained idea.

Now, all of a sudden people say, well, gee, if it is discretionary, it is OK; we will work it out later.

It is still a harebrained idea. Let us be specific; let us make sure we understand what we are doing; let us know what the Soviets are doing; and let us limit where this money will go if it is to be used at all.

I also predict if we do this, this is only the first dip in the Pentagon budget. There will be more and more problems developing. In fact, one of the problems here is it says we can take DOD money to pay for other departments' or agencies' expenses. Does that mean Department of State? I do not want the Department of State dipping into the defense budget.

This gets into foreign affairs. There is a multitude of problems.

Mr. President, we need to have the defense authorization conference report completed so we can go forward with the appropriations bill. I am beginning to wonder if our authorization is even needed around here anymore, if they are not going to do their job. The appropriators have to go forward. The problem is the authorizing committees take too long.

Here it is November 7, and we do not have a Department of Defense authorization bill. Where have we been all year? The appropriators are ready to go. They are waiting on us.

Let us complete it. We have a good conference report that has been laboriously worked out. There is a lot of involvement in how it is crafted. And then we have this thing come out at the last minute, $1 billion for the Soviet Union. We do not know what it is going to do, we do not know what the Soviets are going to do, and it is holding up the whole process.

Mr. President, let us dump that provision. Let us talk about it in a different forum. Let us think about it very carefully, and then let us approve the defense authorization bill.

Mr. President, I yield the floor. I suggest the lack of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE RECESSION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, last Friday the Labor Department reported that the unemployment rate rose again. The Index of Leading Economic Indicators fell slightly. Both facts indicate that contrary to what the President has said, the recession is not over.

Instead, the recession continues. The downturn that began in July 1990 continues to sap the American economy. It has been throwing Americans out of work for 16 months. In the past month alone, more than 400,000 working Americans have put in applications for unemployment insurance each week, and there is no end in sight.

The Democratic Congress has acted twice to provide extended insurance coverage. The President ignored the first bill. He vetoed the second one.

Now, at long last, the President has begun to see what American workers have faced for over a year. The President has now seen that there is a recession.

Now he says he wants to act, but he still does not have a plan of his own. So he has asked the Congress to provide him with one.

I continue to believe that these extended unemployment benefits should be declared an emergency, an emergency just like the President asked be declared to help many people in many foreign countries. As I have said often before, I think American workers should be treated as well as foreigners by the American Government.

The President was willing and eager to declare emergencies to help people overseas, but he will not do so for Americans. We think that is wrong. We should use a portion of the $8 billion surplus in the unemployment insurance trust fund to pay for these extended benefits. That is why the trust fund was created, and that is its intended purpose.

But the President has twice denied the use of the unemployment trust fund. If the President insists on paying for the benefits from some other source, we are prepared to let him do so, even though we do not agree that it is necessary. For us, the overriding need is to provide extended benefits to the millions of American families who need them, who are eligible for them, and who have earned them. It is time for Americans to take care of our own.

If the President chooses not to declare an emergency, the legislation we will shortly introduce would allow him to offset the costs from either of two sources.

He could elect to offset the cost of the unemployment benefits by a modified freeze on spending on foreign aid and State Department operations, or he could elect to provide the funding in the manner previously suggested by Senator BENTSEN, which will increase revenues by changes in tax law.

That means, Mr. President and Members of the Senate, that we are offering the President legislation which will provide extended unemployment benefits and give him three options on how best to deal with that. The first would be to declare an emergency, which we think is the right course, but it is a course which the President has previously twice rejected. The second is to pay for it by a modified freeze on spending on foreign aid and by the State Department. And the third is by changes in tax law which will increase the necessary revenues.

As I said, we believe the President should reverse his previous position and declare an emergency. If he chooses not to do so, if he chooses not to use the trust fund created for this precise purpose, he can either restrain foreign aid or increase revenues. The choice is his.

I want to make it clear that in the alternative with respect to the State Department and foreign aid, I am not suggesting an actual cut in foreign aid. What I am suggesting is that the amount of increase in foreign aid over the next 4 years be less than would otherwise occur. Scheduled funds would be available to honor all of our commitments to important foreign policy goals.

I can best explain this through the use of just two figures. Under current law, if there is no change, foreign aid and State Department spending would increase by $5 billion—that is, $5.9 billion over the next 5 years. Let me repeat that. Under current law, if there is no change in law, spending for foreign aid and for State Department operations would increase by $5.9 billion over the next 5 years. This alternative which we propose, instead, would permit that increase to be by an amount of $2.5 billion, so there would be an increase above the current level of spending for foreign aid and State Department operations, but it would be a lesser increase than would be the case under current law.

This would not affect grain sales to the Soviet Union and there would be sufficient funds to accommodate loan guarantees to Israel.

This modified foreign aid freeze would provide funds for what I think is a higher priority, the needs of American families, the needs of American workers.

I am very disappointed that the administration opposes this alternative. I ask the President and the members of his administration what is wrong with spending a little less, with having a little less of an increase in foreign aid so that we can provide unemployment insurance benefits to American workers who need them? I emphasize we are not even cutting foreign aid, although many Americans would say you ought to cut it. What we are saying is instead of having foreign aid go up, increase by nearly $6 billion over the next 5 years, let us have it increase by $2.5 billion, and to use that difference to pay unemployment insurance to American workers who, through no fault of their own, have been thrown out of work, whose benefits have been exhausted and who now face a harsh winter with no income.

Mr. President, the other alternative, the third alternative, besides declaring an emergency or having less of an increase in foreign aid——

Mr. SARBANES. Will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, certainly.

Mr. SARBANES. Do I understand that representatives of the administration rejected the notion of reducing foreign aid.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. Actually, It is not a cut in foreign aid, it is just that it would not be as much of an increase as would otherwise be expected to take place. They rejected the notion of taking some of what otherwise would be an increase and using it to deal with the problem of the unemployed?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am advised that administration officials are opposed to this provision.

Mr. SARBANES. But this is the same administration that earlier this year came to the Congress and asked us to find an emergency so they could send assistance overseas, and then would not find an emergency in order to help our people here at home, is that not correct?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. In fact, I see the chairman of the Budget Committee here on the floor, who was involved in that budget arrangement that provided the emergency declaration. Is it not correct that the administration this year asked the Congress to find an emergency so they could spend money outside the budget agreement and send it overseas?

Mr. SASSER. Indeed, they did. The administration asked the Congress to cooperate in finding an emergency so they could send foreign aid money to a number of countries in the Middle East. And I think there is also a proposal to send money to Cambodia if I am not mistaken.

I might say to my friend, in the last 10 years this Nation's spending for foreign aid has doubled. We gave $11 billion in economic and military assistance to foreign countries in 1981. By 1991, that had doubled to $22 billion.

Incidentally, along the way our national debt has tripled in that 10 years. State Department funding—and this is funding for the State Department, just one area of foreign aid spending—has grown by 125 percent since 1982—60 percent growth in real terms in State Department spending.

Now all of our other nondefense discretionary programs, programs for education, building highways, a whole host of programs have experienced only three-tenths of 1 percent of real growth—three-tenths of 1 percent of real growth while the State Department budget has grown by 125 percent.

Mr. RIEGLE. If the Senator will yield for a minute, I suspect if you want to be a foreign policy President, as President Bush obviously wants to do, traveling again today over in Europe, you probably have to have a checkbook in it with about $22 billion worth of checks in there, so when you go around the world you can help people as you go. We need a little help here at home.

Mr. SASSER. I agree.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues. If I might complete the remainder of my brief statement.

The revenue option that the President can invoke to which Senator BENTSEN earlier referred has three components. First is the collection of delinquent student loans. Second is the extension of the FUTA tax in 1994 and 1995. Third is an estimated tax provision.

Mr. President, the Congress has been attempting to pass this vital legislation for 4 months. It should be clear to all that what we want is a bill which provides benefits to needy Americans, needy American families who are out of work during these difficult times through no fault of their own. This proposal gives the President the choice. He can either do what we said he should do and which he has refused to do—that is to declare an emergency for Americans.

Even though he has repeatedly declared emergencies to help people overseas; he will not do it for Americans. If he continues in that refusal, then he can agree to pay for it through a modified freeze on foreign aid, again a lesser increase than would otherwise occur on foreign aid, or he can increase revenues in the manner suggested in Senator BENTSEN's plan.

I have discussed this matter with the distinguished Republican leader, Senator DOLE. He is considering it. He has made no commitment to me on it. But we do intend to continue these discussions.

We hope that we can act promptly on this matter, and hope that we can have broad bipartisan support and the approval of the President because the one thing we feel most strongly about is that American families in need should be helped. Right now there are millions of American families in need. That is our objective.

Mr. President, a very important point to be made: The benefit level under this bill is the same level as in the bill the President vetoed. We will not agree to any benefit level less than that amount. Not 1 week less, not 1 day less. That is the absolute minimum that we think is critical.

It is important to note that the level of benefits in this legislation is less than the level of benefits in any recession in the last 25 years. During the past quarter century, in the three major recessions that have occurred, the level of extended benefits was 29 weeks, 39 weeks, and 26 weeks. The level of benefits in this bill is 20 weeks, less than in any recession in the past quarter century. The President says that is too much. We think it is actually too little. We are prepared to go to that amount, not one bit less.

Mr. President, this legislation offers the President three reasonable options. But if he refuses and if he chooses to reject all three of these options and vetoes the bill, we will of course attempt to override that veto so that benefits will still get out to unemployed Americans.

If the President's veto is overridden, he will still have the three options on that same day; that is, to declare an emergency, reduce the increase in foreign aid, or increase revenues under the Tax Code. Should he not take action on that day, then the legislation provides for the spending to be declared an emergency.

Just so that is clear, if we pass the bill, the President would have the three choices. If he rejected all three and vetoed the bill and we overrode the veto, on the day of the override, he would still have all three choices. If he refused to exercise any of those choices, then the bill provides that it would be declared an emergency.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that Senator BENTSEN, myself, and others, have until 9 p.m. today to introduce the bill relating to extended unemployment benefits; that the bill be considered to have had its first reading; that its second reading be deemed to have been objected to and that the bill be placed on that portion of the calendar reserved for items read the first time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, that was cleared in advance with the distinguished Republican leader.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I will be very brief.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. RIEGLE. Yes, of course I yield.

THE RECESSION

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I want to commend the majority leader not only for the piece of legislation that he will be introducing later this evening, but for the major address which he gave last week on a Democratic plan for economic growth.

Mr. President, the majority leader in that plan set out a number of measures to help bring back economic growth and restore economic prosperity in this country: A middle-income tax cut; an incentive to help first-time home buyers so we could encourage economic activity and address this disastrous result in the trend in home ownership in this country; an interest rate and credit policy that would enable businessmen to obtain credit; the enactment of a major transportation bill; the reform of the unemployment insurance system, which of course he has spoken to specifically here this evening; a health care proposal to provide affordable health care for the American people; and a long-term economic growth plan by increasing investment in education, worker training, research and development.

That is a comprehensive, full scope economic plan for America. I want to commend the majority leader for offering it. We have not gotten it from the President of the United States. The leader of the executive branch of this Government has not given us an economic plan. He has not even given us a proposal on unemployment insurance benefits. All he does is veto or reject the efforts on the part of the Congress.

Health care: There has been no proposal out of this administration for a health care plan.

He does support the transportation bill. I concede that. The administration is supportive of the transportation bill.

But this is a comprehensive plan that the majority leader has offered, to help get growth going in America and restore prosperity.

I want to commend the majority leader for that major statement on October 31. It is a very powerful statement of a Democratic plan for economic growth in this country.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I also want to join in commending the leader for his leadership on the extended unemployment benefits bill as well as this comprehensive economic plan just referred to by Senator SARBANES.

It is interesting. Senator SARBANES makes reference to the fact that President Bush has not offered an economic recovery plan. The administration has an economic plan in Mexico. It is called the United States-Mexico Free Trade Agreement, and is designed to create jobs in Mexico essentially by taking the jobs out of the United States.

The President also has a jobs plan for China, the most-favored-nation trading status with China. China has a $15 billion trade surplus with the United States this year. That means they are taking 15 billion dollars' worth of jobs out of our economy and taking them to China.

So the President has an economic plan for virtually every country in the world except this one.

And the same is very, very much true in the area of health care. The Senator from Maryland mentions the fact that the majority leader has offered with several others as cosponsors a comprehensive national health insurance plan. The administration has been in power now 11 years and has not been able to develop a health care plan. It was 8 years of Reagan and Bush and now 3 years of Bush and QUAYLE. That is 11 years: No health care plan; nothing in terms of an initiative to try to provide a comprehensive health insurance plan for the people of this country.

But with respect specifically to the extended unemployment benefits, the package offered tonight by the majority leader, cosponsored by many of us, is urgently needed in this country.

We have high unemployment. We have millions of workers that have exhausted their unemployment benefits, that have been out of work over 6 months, have not been called back to work, cannot find other jobs, and are desperate because of a lack of income. Many are losing their homes and cars. Families are being broken apart. In many cases, they do not have food to be able to feed their children.

I have a front page story from the Detroit Free Press of 2 days ago, and the headline is: "Right to Survive Is at Stake."

"As the mercury falls, the shelters for homeless fill up," it says. There is a picture of a woman standing on a street corner begging for money from passing cars here, saying "Please help. I will work for food. God bless you."

Another woman down below is also out trying to get donations from people. One woman needs $80 for her rent. Another needs $40 for the rent. They do not have the money, and they cannot find the work. This is the problem we are facing in Michigan. I have 170,000 unemployed workers in my State who will receive extended benefits under this legislation.

We have passed it twice. The President has turned it down twice. We are offering it a third time. We give him the choice of three different ways to finance those benefits. He ought to be able to pick one of those three ways to do it.

People like this, who have worked all their lives, who cannot find work, are in desperate circumstances. They need help. One of the reasons that all these homeless shelters are filled up is that these are not just vagabond people, many of them had jobs 4, 5 months ago, but they do not have jobs now. They have exhausted their savings, and they have been put out on the street, and they need help. It is time for this Nation to help.

So I salute the majority leader for his initiative. We have to get it passed again, send it down to the White House; and this time I hope the President will decide that it is time to respond to this urgent need in the United States. The people of the country need this help. They deserve the help. We have given the help to all these foreign countries. It is time to help our own.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair requests, in his capacity as the Senator from Washington, that he be added as a cosponsor to the legislation. Does the Senator from Michigan yield the floor?

Mr. RIEGLE. Yes.

Mr. SARBANES addressed the Chair.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I want to commend the Senator from Michigan for his very powerful statement and the very strong leadership he has shown on this very important issue.

I must say to the Senator from Michigan that I actually expected the President to declare an emergency and let the benefits flow to the unemployed in August when we sent the bill to him. I know the administration made noises about not doing that, but I had hoped, up until the last minute, that the President would do it. I cannot, for the life of me, understand why the President did not do that.

After all, it was this President who came to the Congress earlier in the year, asked us to join with him in finding an emergency, so he could send assistance overseas. The Congress acceded to the President's request to make that possible.

In this instance, we were asked the President to join with us in a determination that an emergency existed here at home, an emergency with unemployed workers who have exhausted their benefits. In every other recession, we have paid these extended benefits.

Referring to this chart, this is the Carter years, and this is the Reagan years.

Mr. RIEGLE. These are the extended unemployment benefits?

Mr. SARBANES. The monthly average of extended unemployment benefits. You can see what happened. In each instance, it went up significantly. This is under President Bush, during this recession. Hardly anyone is receiving benefits.

Mr. RIEGLE. I almost cannot see it there.

Mr. SARBANES. I can understand that. It is very difficult to make it out.

Look at this in contrast with what happened in the previous recessions. When we raise these benefits, it is being done at a time when the trust fund has these large balances in it. The premise of the unemployment benefit trust fund is to pay into it when unemployment is down. When things are good, you build up a surplus, and then you use it when you hit a hard time. Then you do not have the whole problem of how you are going to pay for the benefits.

The system was constructed to answer that ahead of time by building up the surplus. So you paid into it, and the money was there to be drawn upon when the recession came, and you had to pay the unemployed, and the unemployed would not be left out there without any benefit. If there was no money in the trust fund, then we would have a problem on our hands in dealing with a recession situation. That is not the case.

Mr. SASSER. Is the Senator saying that here in a recession that started in July 1990, and is now almost a year and a half in progress, that we are building up a surplus in the unemployment insurance trust fund?

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator has perceived a very important point about this chart. That is, not only are we not using the surplus in a recession that was in the trust fund for that purpose, but to compound the felony, we are building the surplus up right during a recession. I mean, there is nothing that is more counterproductive than to be in the process of adding to the surplus right in a recession when you have millions of people desperate for extended benefits.

Mr. SASSER. Just examining the chart there, the fact that we are building up a surplus in this recession, I contrast that with what is shown on your chart there, the recession of 1983. It appears that the fund at that time was utilized for what it was intended to be utilized for—it was being drawn down.

Mr. SARBANES. It was drawn down during the heavy Reagan recession, and it started to build up again, as we came out of that recession and had better employment. It continues to build up. This administration is the first one not to extend the benefits.

We only show the three previous recessions on this chart. But if one went back and showed all those recessions since the end of World War II, you would have a similar situation, with the number of people drawing the extended benefits going up during each recessionary period. The numbers go up, and you draw down your surplus. Then you build it back up again.

Look what happened here in this recession.

Mr. SASSER. If I understand the Senator's chart here, we have the recession of 1974 when President Gerald Ford was President. We have the persons receiving extended unemployment insurance benefits spiking up to a very high spike there, and we see it going down as the recession abates after President Carter took office, and then we see it spiking up again in the recession of 1979, going down again, and spiking up in the recession under President Reagan in 1982.

But here in this recession, why, it is no higher, apparently, than it would be in a time of prosperity.

Mr. RIEGLE. If the Senator will yield at that point, what is going on here is that the administration has tried to pretend there is no recession. In other words, they wanted to say there is not one. I think the Senator from Maryland has a quotation from Mr. Darman, the Budget Director, who, a few months ago, spoke out against any extended unemployment benefits, because he said there was no recession. Of if there was, it was all over, and people did not need extended benefits, and nothing should happen.

So what they have, in effect, done is tried to pretend all along that the problem either was not there, or was not as bad as we know it to have been then and now.

Now they finally have been caught short, because it is so obvious across the country. You look at polling data, you have 70 percent of the people of the country saying the economy is on the wrong track. And even today they are still fighting against this. We have had the President now turn down these extended unemployment benefits not once but twice.

Mr. SASSER. He has, indeed. But I think that under the leadership of the majority leader we are presenting or will be presenting shortly to the President a package he simply cannot turn down. In other words, what excuse is there to turn down extending these unemployment benefits to these millions of people who paid for them, but have exhausted them, if we give him legislation, which I hope we will do very shortly, which allows him to pay for it by simply cuts in foreign aid?

Mr. RIEGLE. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. I think that is it.

Mr. RIEGLE. Cuts in the planned increase in foreign aid.

Mr. SARBANES. It is not a cut in foreign aid. I think the people in the country are coming to see through the administration's rhetoric.

I have a letter here from an unemployed person who says, "What constitutes an emergency? Whenever the unemployment rates have been this devastating in the past, the Federal Government has automatically stepped in." Which is what this chart shows, that the Government stepped in. What has made this emergency different?

Listen to this question: "Could it be that no one wants to admit that there is an emergency?" I am frank to tell you I think that is one of the problems.

In December 1990, when we were moving into this recession, Secretary Brady said—and I am quoting him. This was in the New York Times. He says, "I do not think it is the end of the world even if we have a recession. We will pull out of it again. No big deal."

Then President Bush came up in January of this year to give the State of the Union Message, and President Bush said, and I am quoting him now:

> I know that tonight in some regions of our country people are in genuine economic distress and I hear them. Earlier this month Cathy Blackwell of Massachusetts wrote me about what can happen when the economy slows down saying "My heart is aching and I think you should know your people out here are hurting badly." I understand. I am not unrealistic about the future. But there are reasons to be optimistic about the economy.

That is in January of this year.

Then in the economic report of the President in February, President Bush said, and I quote him:

> The current recession is expected to be mild and brief by historical standards.

Michael Boskin, his chief economic adviser, said in the economic report:

> Our outlook is that the economy, after a relatively brief and mild recession, will rebound by the middle of the year. The recession will be rather shallow and short.

Here is what they did. They predicted a shallow and short recession. The President makes a State of the Union Message that says that there are reasons to be optimistic about the economy. This did not work out. But they did not revise their view. They were not prepared to admit that we were facing an economic crisis.

In July, Boskin, in a news conference, said "The economy has begun to recover." In testimony to the Joint Economic Committee in late July he said "The economic recovery appears to be underway."

To compound this, as the distinguished Senator from Michigan knows, because he had a very sharp exchange with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. Darman, on July 22. Mr. Darman said an unemployment bill was "unnecessary because the recession reached bottom in May and by the time the beneficiaries actually got the money it would not be needed." Can you imagine that?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, if the Senator will just yield on that particular point, 8.6 million Americans—that is twice the population of or three times perhaps the population of my State of Tennessee—woke up this morning and they had no job to go to. That is up 140,000 people since September. If you add together those who are unemployed, the 8.6 million, with those who lost good, full-time jobs and are now working part time, add to that the million and a half people who becomes discouraged that they no longer are looking for jobs—they fall off the statistics when they quit looking—you have almost 13 percent of the work force of this country either unemployed or underemployed. One out of every 10 Americans, as I speak to you this evening, I say to my colleagues, is on food stamps.

If this is not a recession, I do not know what it is. It is getting worse. It is not getting better. The economic indicators for September were worse than they were for July. In other words, it is getting worse; it is not getting better. And we are on the verge of a double-digit recession here.

(Mr. RIEGLE assumed the chair.)

Mr. SARBANES. The American people know it is getting worse. Look what is happening to consumer confidence. The consumer confidence index dropped 12 points last month. It started back up and now it is starting back down again. The American people know what is happening out there.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. SARBANES. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as the Budget Committee chairman, I first just want to echo what he is saying. We set aside this fund to pay these benefits in this period and now we have an even worse thing happening, which I know the Senator from Maryland is well aware of. They are attempting to drop interest rates through the Federal Reserve System and the President goes out and says to everybody "Buy, buy, buy, and bring us out of this recession." But how can they possibly do this when they have no money?

There is no program by this administration to justify jobs to people. There is no unemployment compensation flowing out to them so they will have some money to carry over until they get another job. So we have the potential here for a disaster, and I compliment the Senator from Maryland, the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from Michigan, and particularly the majority leader for coming up with an economic plan to help our people here at home.

If we can help people all over the world, we can help our middle-class workers who are in between jobs, trying to find a job, or even worse, as the Senator from Tennessee said, have been out of work for so long they have lost hope. We have to give them this unemployment compensation and now.

I agree with the Senator from Maryland. It is beyond my comprehension, having seen other Presidents of both parties, back through the years, this President not use the unemployment compensation trust fund for what it was created to do. All he had to say was this was an emergency and the Budget Act was complied with, and we would have helped our people in the way we have done for over half a century. So I commend the Senators.

Mr. SARBANES. That would have been back in mid-August.

Mr. ADAMS. In mid-August that we said that.

Mr. SARBANES. I say to the Senator from Washington that he has touched on another important point. By definition you do not get unemployment benefits until you have held a job over a continuous period of time. So we are talking about working men and women, the people who have helped to build this country.

In addition, for those who have been fortunate enough to hold a job, to keep their job, their standard of living is dropping.

Now the very distinguished Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the Budget Committee, had on the floor the other day a very important chart that shows that the annual real per capita GNP growth under George Bush has been negative. George Bush is the only President since World War II where annual real per capita GNP growth was a negative. There have been nine Presidents, including George Bush, since World War II. Under the other eight we had positive real per capita GNP growth. In other words, people's living standards rose in varying degrees. It was better under John Kennedy of the other eight Presidents, but under all of them there was some positive advance. Only under President Bush has it been negative.

Just last week we got figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics that over the past year the wage and salary of working people—we are not now talking about unearned income, interest, and dividends that go primarily, not entirely but primarily to the people at the top of the scale who have really just benefited incredibly over the last decade—but for wage and salary people over the last year, their incomes went up 1.8 percent.

Inflation went up 3.9 percent. So the prices they had to pay went up 3.9 percent. Their incomes went up 1.8 percent. So at the end of the year, their living standard was lower. They were worse off in real terms than they had been at the beginning of the year.

Mr. ADAMS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator from Maryland will yield, I think he touched on a point there a moment ago; the fact that these people who have paid for these unemployment insurance benefits have exhausted them and now are in desperate straits.

I read a letter or a statement made by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. Darman, in which he said that extending these unemployment insurance benefits would act as a "disincentive to employment," as if to infer that these people were unemployed because they wanted to be, and if their unemployment benefits were extended, that they would not have an incentive to go back to work.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. SASSER. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. Darman said that. It is just outrageous. I want to say this: If the American people were dependent upon Budget Director Darman's compassion and concern for their situation, it would be very bleak indeed.

Now, he said that in that very hearing where he said an unemployment bill was unnecessary. He then went on and said it would have the effect of giving them an incentive to be unemployed.

I just want to read a letter that I received from an unemployed person, a very eloquent letter. I am just going to quote:

> What we as unemployed people want is to be able to rebuild our self-esteem, pay our bills, and contribute to this country. We are not looking for a handout, but right now we need more help.
> It is sad to know the funds are there, but the President will not release them.

I am directing this directly to Director Darman on the basis of what the Senator said about his attitude—

> People have this idea of being unemployed as fun. It isn't. It is extremely depressing.
>
> Everyone thought I was lucky having the summer off. I did not enjoy 1 day of this summer, as I was worrying about getting a job. It is on your mind constantly, from when you wake up in the morning until you go to bed at night. And then, if you should wake up during the night, it is right there hounding on you.
>
> You are on edge constantly. You fight with people for no reason at all. Does that sound like fun? I want a job and I want a paycheck.

Mr. SASSER. Well, I just say to my friend from Maryland, I think that says it all. And to say that extending these unemployment compensation benefits to those who have exhausted their benefits, as we have in every other recession prior to this time—under the administrations of Eisenhower, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter, even Ronald Reagan—to say extending these benefits would be a disincentive, it is a mystery to me how one could think that.

Think of how many automobiles have been repossessed, how many homes may have been lost, how many people evicted from their apartments, how many marriages on the rocks, how many children who have been hurt by the fact that these unemployment insurance benefits were not extended.

And I see polling data which indicates that now the biggest fear—what the American people are frightened of, the middle-class American—now, for the first time, their greatest fear is losing their job. They are frightened that they will lose their job, because they have seen so many of their friends and neighbors lose their jobs.

And I do not know where the Budget Director gets the idea that extending these unemployment benefits to those who have exhausted them would be a disincentive.

But I do know in my native State of Tennessee of a small factory advertised that they had 10 or 15 jobs, positions, available. I say to my friend from Maryland, 800 people showed up at this little factory before 7 o'clock in the morning. The sheriff's deputies had to be summoned to maintain some kind of order. These people were desperate for work. They would do anything just to get a job.

Now, to say that would be a disincentive to give these people some sustenance, to put bread on the table and to keep a roof over their heads and to keep some sort of warmth going as we approach winter, I do not understand that kind of reasoning, quite frankly.

I mean, these unemployed people paid for these benefits. Their employers paid for these benefits. It was deducted out of their paychecks for so-called rainy day funds. Now, whether this administration and whether the President wants to believe it or not, the rainy day is here. It has been here since July 1990.

My friend from Maryland will recall that it was not until December 1990, if memory serves me correctly, that Dr. Michael Boskin of the administration finally acknowledged that there was a recession that had begun in July 1990, some 7 months before. He finally acknowledged that there was a recession. But he said, "Don't worry; it's over. We are into recovery now." That was in December 1990.

And here we stand, in November 1991, Thanksgiving a couple of weeks away, Christmas 6 weeks away, and this recession is getting worse. And here we are, still trying to get the President and his administration to extend these emergency unemployment insurance benefits that had been extended in every recession.

You know, we started back—I ask my friend from Maryland, when did we pass the first bill the President vetoed?

Mr. SARBANES. He vetoed it in mid-August.

Mr. SASSER. In mid-August.

Mr. SARBANES. Well, he did not veto it. He refused to declare an emergency, and therefore the benefits could not flow. Because the way we sent him a bill, we in effect were trying to draw the President in, in a cooperative way, to declare this emergency, just like he had declared an emergency earlier in the year to help people overseas.

The President refused to do it. Therefore the unemployed people could have been receiving benefits from mid-August, if President George Bush had simply concurred in that legislation.

Mr. SASSER. Then we passed another bill to try to get unemployment insurance benefits extended in September, and the President vetoed that bill. And he said, well, he wanted to extend unemployment benefits, but he did not like the bill we sent him. So now we are going to send him a third; we are going to make a third try at it.

We are going to have a three-pronged approach. We are going to let him declare an emergency situation, as he declared economic aid to the Kurds, economic aid to Israel, economic aid to a whole host of countries as being emergencies. He can declare this an emergency.

If he chooses not to do that, then we are providing in this legislation that the unemployment insurance benefits will be paid for by taking the money out of foreign aid. Now, we are not saying that we are cutting foreign aid. What we are saying is, we are just going to arrest the growth of foreign aid.

Between 1992 and 1995, if memory serves me correctly, we will have outlays of something like about $85 billion for foreign aid. We are simply saying: Mr. President, can you see your way clear to take $3½ billion or less of this $85 billion in foreign aid and give some relief to the millions of our people who are suffering because they cannot find jobs? We give him those two options.

And if he does not want to use either one of those two options, the third option is a measure to raise some revenues to pay for it. We give him three options so he cannot say: You have not given me a way to fulfill our needs here.

I mean, he has three choices. All we want to do is to stop the posturing here, and let us get on with giving these unemployed people the unemployment insurance compensation that they are entitled to, that they have paid for, that their employers have paid for.

And we see, if our friend from Maryland shows us his chart—can we see that once more, the chart which indicates the surplus that is building up?

In 1992, we see a surplus of, what is that?

Mr. SARBANES. Almost $10 billion.

Mr. SASSER. Almost $10 billion.

Mr. SARBANES. This fund, I will say to the Senator, in a recession, is building up at the rate of about $1.2 billion a year. It is incredible. You pay the money into this trust fund for the purpose of paying the benefits in a recession. Not only are they not paying the benefits in the recession, but in fact they are adding to the fund.

The Secretary of Labor, Secretary Martin was asked about this, and she thought it was wonderful. She says, we have all this money in the trust fund.

What are they going to do, sit on it and hatch it? The purpose of having it, building up the trust fund, is to pay it out when you hit a difficult time.

Her comments are a little bit like the librarian when asked how is everything in the library, who says, "Wonderful. Every book is on the shelf." The purpose of the library is not to have every book on the shelf, and the purpose of this trust fund is not to build up huge balances in the middle of a recession when you have millions of people who need extended benefits, people who are losing their homes, their cars, are unable to meet their payments, do not know how to put food on the table for their families.

Mr. SASSER. If I could just draw the attention of my friend from Maryland to this, this is the extended benefit trust fund, with emphasis on "trust." In other words, these funds are held in trust by the U.S. Government. These are the funds that employees, workers, have paid in. These are funds that their employers have paid in, to be held in trust by the U.S. Government to be used for extended unemployment benefits when we get into an extended recession. That is precisely what we are in here.

Mr. SARBANES. That is right. I say to the Senator the very reason we have a trust fund and the reason we build up a balance in it is so that when we go into a recession we do not get into this problem of how are we going to pay for the benefits, the very issue that the President has now precipitated. The system was constructed to deal with that question ahead of time by building up the surplus. The President will not use the money in the trust fund for the purpose for which it was intended. It is an abuse of this trust fund.

Mr. SASSER. No, I will say to my friend from Maryland, it is a breach of trust.

Mr. SARBANES. Well, yes, it is.

Mr. SASSER. This is a breach of trust between this administration and the workers who paid their hard-earned dollars into this trust fund and the employers who paid their money into this trust fund. This is a breach of trust.

Mr. SARBANES. I say to the Senator, I am hearing from employers who are saying to me, "We paid the money in for the purpose of paying the benefits. We want to see the benefits paid."

Many responsible employers want their workers who have been laid off through no fault of their own because of the downturn in the economy to receive these unemployment benefits. They have a concern for their workforce.

It is really sad. It is a disgrace.

One lady wrote to me and said:

> I am writing to you regarding a serious crisis that exists nationally. The subject is a lack of adequate unemployment benefits for working men and women. What has been allowed to happen in this country has been a disgrace.

And she is absolutely right. She says:

> As I stood in line every week I got to hear firsthand the concern in the voices of the people. The first blow was losing their job. The second was seeing the United States Government abandon them in their hour of need. These are the hard-working people that have, over the years, made this country great. These were workers who have held the same job, in many cases, for numbers of years.

In fact, you are having workers who have worked 10, 12, 14 years in the same job hit by this recession and being laid off. They get the basic 26 weeks. Then they have exhausted their benefits.

A year ago the unemployment rate was 5.7 percent. Today the unemployment rate is 6.8 percent. That is the official rate for those completely out of work. As the Senator from Tennessee has pointed out, there are another 6.5 million people working part time who want to work full time.

If you lost your job a year ago, with an unemployment rate of 5.7 percent, by now you would have used up your benefits. You would now be looking for a job in a job market where the unemployment rate is 6.8 percent. In other words, it is tougher out there now to find a job than it was at the time that you lost your job. Yet this administration will not extend the benefits in order to try to help people through this period. The purpose of providing these benefits is to help people through this period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator yield to a question from the Chair on the chart that was held up a moment ago? From this distance it appears to me the surplus in the fund is about $10 billion. Is that accurate?

Mr. SARBANES. I would say to the Senator, that is what it is projected it would be by the end of next year. At the moment we expect it to be over $8 billion by the end of this year. It is building up by about $1.2 to $1.4 billion a year. Can you imagine? We are building up the surplus right in the middle of a recession. Let us leave aside the question of drawing down the surplus in a recession, which is, of course, what you should do. But here we are, not only not doing that, we are building the surplus up even higher, right in the midst of a recession and with no one drawing these unemployment benefits. No wonder people are so desperate out there.

Let me just quote from a letter I received:

> Please do what you can to help all of us out. We do not want it; we need it and we need it now. Please see what you and your fellow Senators can do to help get this country back on its feet or else this country will be gone. I know it sounds stupid but I think it could happen if we don't help ourselves and each other. We are falling off the face of the Earth and no one cares.

Let me just repeat that. "We are falling off the face of the Earth and no one cares." I say to the President, I say to Director Darman, I say to Chairman Boskin, I say to Secretary Brady: It is time for you to care. It is time for these people not to fall off the face of the Earth. These are hard-working Americans who helped to build this country. These are the people who contributed financially and through their physical effort to build this Nation, and it is time to respond to their situation and not allow them to fall off the face of the Earth.

We care, and we are going to continue to press this issue with the President of the United States. He has demonstrated twice his inability to perceive and understand this situation. The majority leader is now going to go back to him a third time with a proposal that will give him three options to pay these benefits. He can choose any one of the three options. It is time for the President to recognize the hurt that exists across this country and to try to help these people all across America.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland has done yeoman service in bringing this whole problem of unemployment compensation benefits having expired and not having been extended in this recession to the attention of this body and, indeed, to the attention of the country.

The Senator from Maryland, in his capacity as chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, has led the fight to see that these 8.5 million Americans, 140,000 more this month than last month, who have exhausted their unemployment benefits or are on the verge of exhausting them, are given the same treatment that unemployed workers have gotten in every other recession. He has been ably assisted in that effort by the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

Michigan has been hard hit and the Senator from Michigan has been on this floor day after day trying to fashion some type of remedy for these millions who are suffering.

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from Tennessee for his very kind comments, and I also want to thank him for the extraordinary leadership which he, along with the Senator from Michigan, has provided in this fight, and the majority leader and Senator BENTSEN, the chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. SASSER. Indeed.

Mr. SARBANES. In fact, Mr. President, when we tried to override the President's veto of the last unemployment benefits bill, we also had the support in that effort of eight of our Republican colleagues. We had all of the Democratic Members, 57 Democrats, and we had the support of 8 of our Republican colleagues who departed from the President and from Republican discipline because they perceived the crisis which exists.

The unfortunate fact though is, even with 65 votes, we could not override the President's veto. This underscores the power of the veto weapon in the hands of the President. It is very important that be understood because the President vetoed that bill. We made an effort in the Senate to override that veto. We had a vote on the veto override; 65 Senators to override the veto, 35 not to override the veto. Sixty-five to thirty-five was the margin and unfortunately, under our Constitution which requires two-thirds, it fell short by two votes in overriding the veto.

But that is the weapon that the President has brandished, not only on this issue but on other issues designed to encourage economic growth and to bring about paying attention to the problems of our working middle class in this country. The President has that veto stamp which he has used and then he holds onto sufficient numbers in order to sustain his veto. The sufficient numbers are a clear minority of either this body or the other body, and yet it is enough for the President to sustain his veto. That is what he did in this instance.

But the Senator from Tennessee, as the chairman of the Budget Committee, has been extraordinary in his leadership on this issue. He understands thoroughly the budget situation and understands the rationale for our effort to have this treated as an emergency. Particularly I appreciate his emphasis on the trust fund aspect of this situation, because faith is not being kept with the American people. That is one of the issues that is also at stake in this dispute.

Mr. SASSER. I say to my friend from Maryland that I am hopeful and optimistic that this body will act speedily on this new bill to extend unemployment insurance benefits and get it to the President's desk. As my friend from Maryland knows, if we passed it this evening and took it over to the White House, the President would be unable to sign it. He is in Rome, Italy, on another trip abroad. But we are hopeful that he will return from abroad shortly. I am not sure how long this particular trip will last, but we are hopeful that he will return from Rome, Italy, shortly and we can have a bill on his desk when he arrives back home, and I am hopeful he will sign this one.

Of course, like my friend from Maryland, frankly, I thought he would sign the first two bills. Certainly, if he was going to ignore the first bill that was sent to him, I thought that when the second bill went to him and he had no choice but either to sign it or veto it, I was confident the President would sign that bill to extend this unemployment insurance, these benefits to the millions who need it. I was stunned, frankly, when he did veto it since it had passed this Congress, both Houses, with large bipartisan majorities.

But as soon as he returns from abroad, I am hopeful this bill will be on his desk waiting for his consideration, and I hope before he even unpacks his bags from this latest trip that he will sign this bill extending unemployment compensation benefits.

Mr. SARBANES. I say to my colleague that some of our colleagues on the House side suggested that the President should visit the Romes in this country: Rome, GA; Rome, MS; Rome, OH, and so forth and so on, instead of Rome, Italy. I do not really go that far. I think the President has these responsibilities internationally. In a sense, they have to be met.

But I cannot understand why that seems to be the only dimension to this Presidency. Why is it that the President cannot have a domestic dimension? Why is it the President who perceived an emergency overseas in order to send assistance cannot perceive an emergency here at home in order to help the unemployed people in this country?

I am not saying that the President does not have to exercise his international responsibilities, but what about exercising his national responsibilities, his domestic responsibilities? He was elected President of the United States, and the United States is a world leader and, therefore, he has responsibilities on the international scene. But what about his responsibilities as President of the United States for the problems at home on the domestic front for our unemployed people, for health care for Americans, for the education of our children, for the range of problems that Americans confront every day in their own lives?

The President needs to have a domestic dimension to him. He needs to pay attention here. The fact of the matter is that the United States cannot be an international leader, cannot be strong abroad, if the United States is not strong at home. Our international leadership depends, in the last analysis, upon our domestic strength. If we fail to build a strong society here, strong economically, strong socially, a society marked by equity and justice, if we fail to build that here at home, he can make all the trips he wants around the world, but his position of leadership will be eroded internationally and at home.

So these problems cry out. People are calling out with a plaintive cry for help. It is time to respond to that and we call on the administration to address it. It is interesting, they have not sent their proposal to us as to what ought to be done about the unemployed. They keep finding fault in the proposals that we send to them, but they have not sent a proposal to us. It is very clear that if the Congress was not making the effort, if we were not making the effort to send something down there, this President would not do anything about it. He and his advisers would just let this situation go. They would not do a thing about it.

He has rejected two of the proposals we sent to him. He has not sent one to us. We are going to send a third one with these options in it. I call on the President to approve it and let these people get their benefits.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 1945 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1945

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Unemployment Compensation Act of 1991".

(2) such individual's rights to such compensation have been terminated by reason of the expiration of the benefit year with respect to which such rights existed.

(d) WEEKLY BENEFIT AMOUNT.—For purposes of any agreement under this Act—

(1) the amount of emergency unemployment compensation which shall be payable to any individual for any week of total unemployment shall be equal to the amount of the regular compensation (including dependent's allowances) payable to such individual during such individual's benefit year under the State law for a week of total unemployment,

(2) the terms and conditions of the State law which apply to claims for extended compensation and to the payment thereof shall apply to claims for emergency unemployment compensation and the payment thereof, except where inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, or with the regulations or operating instructions of the Secretary promulgated to carry out this Act, and

(3) the maximum amount of emergency unemployment compensation payable to any individual for whom an account is established under section 102 shall not exceed the amount established in such account for such individual.

(e) ELECTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law (and if State law permits), the Governor of a State in a 7-percent period or an 8-percent period, as defined in section 102(c), is authorized to and may elect to trigger off an extended compensation period in order to provide payment of emergency unemployment compensation to individuals who have exhausted their rights to regular compensation under State law.

SEC. 102. EMERGENCY UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION ACCOUNT.

(b) AMOUNT IN ACCOUNT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount established in an account under subsection (a) shall be equal to the lesser of—

(A) 100 percent of the total amount of regular compensation (including dependents' allowances) payable to the individual with respect to the benefit year (as determined under the State law) on the basis of which the individual most recently received regular compensation, or

(B) the applicable limit times the individual's average weekly benefit amount for the benefit year.

(2) APPLICABLE LIMIT.—For purposes of this section—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this paragraph, the applicable limit shall be determined under the following table:

(C) INCREASE IN APPLICABLE LIMIT.—If the applicable limit in effect for any week is higher than the applicable limit for any prior week, the applicable limit shall be the higher applicable limit, reduced (but not below zero) by the number of prior weeks for which emergency unemployment compensation was paid to the individual from the account involved.

(3) REDUCTION FOR EXTENDED BENEFITS.—The amount in an account under paragraph (1) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the aggregate amount of extended compensation (if any) received by such individual relating to the same benefit year under the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970.

(4) WEEKLY BENEFIT AMOUNT.—For purposes of this subsection, an individual's weekly benefit amount for any week is the amount of regular compensation (including dependents' allowances) under the State law payable to such individual for such week for total unemployment.

(c) DETERMINATION OF PERIODS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the terms "8-percent period", "7-percent period", "6-percent period", and "other period" mean, with respect to any State, the period which—

(B) EXCEPTION IF APPLICABLE RANGE INCREASES.—If, but for subparagraph (A), another period with a higher applicable range would be in effect for such State, such other period shall take effect without regard to subparagraph (A).

(5) NOTIFICATION BY SECRETARY.—When a determination has been made that an 8-percent period, 7-percent period, 6-percent period, or other period is beginning or ending with respect to a State, the Secretary shall cause notice of such determination to be published in the Federal Register.

(2) TRANSITION.—In the case of an individual who is receiving emergency unemployment compensation for a week which includes August 1, 1992, such compensation shall continue to be payable to such individual in accordance with subsection (b) for any week beginning in a period of consecutive weeks for each of which the individual meets the eligibility requirements of this Act.

(3) REACHBACK PROVISIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—If—

(ii) a period described in subsection (c)(2)(A) is in effect with respect to the State for the first week following November 16, 1991, such individual shall be entitled to emergency unemployment compensation under this Act in the same manner as if such individual's benefit year ended no earlier than the last day of such following week.

(b) TREATMENT OF REIMBURSABLE COMPENSATION.—No payment shall be made to any State under this section in respect of compensation to the extent the State is entitled to reimbursement in respect of such compensation under the provisions of any Federal law other than this Act or chapter 85 of title 5, United States Code. A State shall not be entitled to any reimbursement under such chapter 85 in respect of any compensation to the extent the State is entitled to reimbursement under this Act in respect of such compensation.

(c) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT.—Sums payable to any State by reason of such State having an agreement under this Act shall be payable, either in advance or by way of reimbursement (as may be determined by the Secretary), in such amounts as the Secretary estimates the State will be entitled to receive under this Act for each calendar month, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any amount by which the Secretary finds that his estimates for any prior calendar month were greater or less than the amounts which should have been paid to the State. Such estimates may be made on the basis of such statistical, sampling, or other method as may be agreed upon by the Secretary and the State agency of the State involved.

SEC. 104. FINANCING PROVISIONS.

(b) CERTIFICATION.—The Secretary shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to each State the sums payable to such State under this Act. The Secretary of the Treasury, prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, shall make payments to the State in accordance with such certification, by transfers from the extended unemployment compensation account (as established by section 905 of the Social Security Act) to the account of such State in the Unemployment Trust Fund.

SEC. 105. FRAUD AND OVERPAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If an individual knowingly has made, or caused to be made by another, a false statement or representation of a material fact, or knowingly has failed, or caused another to fail, to disclose a material fact, and as a result of such false statement or representation or of such nondisclosure such individual has received an amount of emergency unemployment compensation under this Act to which he was not entitled, such individual—

(1) shall be ineligible for further emergency unemployment compensation under this Act in accordance with the provisions of the applicable State unemployment compensation law relating to fraud in connection with a claim for unemployment compensation, and

(2) shall be subject to prosecution under section 1001 of title 18, United States Code.

(b) REPAYMENT.—In the case of individuals who have received amounts of emergency unemployment compensation under this Act to which they were not entitled, the State shall require such individuals to repay the amounts of such emergency unemployment compensation to the State agency, except that the State agency may waive such repayment if it determines that—

(1) the payment of such emergency unemployment compensation was without fault on the part of any such individual, and

(2) such repayment would be contrary to equity and good conscience.

(c) RECOVERY BY STATE AGENCY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The State agency may recover the amount to be repaid, or any part thereof, by deductions from any emergency unemployment compensation payable to such individual under this Act or from any unemployment compensation payable to such individual under any Federal unemployment compensation law administered by the State agency or under any other Federal law administered by the State agency which provides for the payment of any assistance or allowance with respect to any week of unemployment, during the 3-year period after the date such individuals received the payment of the emergency unemployment compensation to which they were not entitled, except that no single deduction may exceed 50 percent of the weekly benefit amount from which such deduction is made.

(2) OPPORTUNITY FOR HEARING.—No repayment shall be required, and no deduction shall be made, until a determination has been made, notice thereof and an opportunity for a fair hearing has been given to the individual, and the determination has become final.

(d) REVIEW.—Any determination by a State agency under this section shall be subject to review in the same manner and to the same extent as determinations under the State unemployment compensation law, and only in that manner and to that extent.

SEC. 106. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act:

(1) IN GENERAL.—The terms "compensation", "regular compensation", "extended compensation", "additional compensation", "benefit year", "base period", "State", "State agency", "State law", and "week" have the meanings given such terms under section 205 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970.

(2) ELIGIBILITY PERIOD.—An individual's eligibility period shall consist of the weeks in the individual's benefit year which begin in an 8-percent period, 7-percent period, 6-percent period, or other period under this Act and, if the individual's benefit year ends on or after November 16, 1991, any weeks thereafter which begin in any such period. In no event shall an individual's period of eligibility include any weeks after the 39th week after the end of the benefit year for which the individual exhausted his rights to regular compensation or extended compensation.

(3) RATE OF TOTAL UNEMPLOYMENT.—The term "rate of total unemployment" means the average unadjusted total rate of unemployment (as determined by the Secretary) for a State for the period consisting of the most recent 6-calendar month period for which data for all States are published.

TITLE II—DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM TO PROVIDE JOB SEARCH ASSISTANCE

SEC. 201. DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM TO PROVIDE JOB SEARCH ASSISTANCE.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—The Secretary of Labor (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") shall carry out a demonstration program under this title for purposes of determining the feasibility of implementing job search assistance programs. To carry out such demonstration program, the Secretary shall enter into agreements with 3 States which—

(1) apply to participate in such program, and

(2) demonstrate to the Secretary that they are capable of implementing the provisions of an agreement under this section.

(b) SELECTION OF STATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In determining whether to enter into an agreement with a State under this section, the Secretary shall take into consideration at least—

(A) the size, geography, and occupational and industrial composition of the State,

"(iv) Annualization exception.—This subparagraph shall not apply to any required installment if the individual establishes that the requirements of subclauses (I) and (II) of clause (ii) would not have been satisfied if such subclauses were applied on the basis of—

"(I) the annualized amount of the modified current year tax determined under rules similar to the rules of paragraph (2)(B)(i) and by assuming that all items referred to in clause (i) of subparagraph (D) accrued ratably during the current year, and

"(II) the annualized amount of the adjusted gross income for months in the current year ending before the due date for the installment.

Any reduction in an installment under the preceding sentence shall be recaptured by increasing the amount of the 1st succeeding required installment (with respect to which the requirements of the preceding sentence are not met) by the amount of such reduction.

"(v) Sole penalty.—No criminal or civil penalty (other than that imposed by this section) shall be imposed solely by reason of failing to meet the requirements of this section in a case to which this subparagraph applies if the individual made required installments on the basis of 100 percent of the tax shown on the return of the individual for the preceding taxable year.

"(vi) Cost-of-living adjustments.—

"(I) In general.—If the cost-of-living amount for any calendar year is equal to or greater than $2,500, then the dollar amounts under clause (ii)(I) (as previously adjusted under this clause) for any taxable year beginning in any subsequent calendar year shall be increased by $2,500 ($1,250 in the case of the dollar amount applicable to married individuals filing separate returns).

"(II) Cost-of-living amount.—The cost-of-living amount for any calendar year is the excess (if any) of $10,000, increased by the cost-of-living adjustment for such calendar year, over the dollar amount in effect under clause (ii)(I) for taxable years beginning in such calendar year for individuals other than married individuals filing separate returns.

"(III) Cost-of-living adjustment.—For purposes of this clause, the cost-of-living adjustment for any calendar year shall be determined in the same manner as under section 1(f)(3), except that '1991' shall be substituted for '1989' in subparagraph (B) thereof.

"(D) Modified current year tax.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'modified current year tax' means the tax shown on the return for the current year determined with the following modifications:

"(i) All pass-thru items of an S corporation or partnership shown on the return for the current year shall be treated as identical to the amount of such items shown on the return for the preceding taxable year.

"(ii) The amount of any gain from any involuntary conversion (within the meaning of section 1033) which is shown on the return for the current year shall be disregarded.

In the case of a 10-percent owner, clause (i) shall not apply.

"(E) Other definitions and special rules.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) Current year.—The term 'current year' means the taxable year for which the amount of the installment is being determined.

"(ii) Pass-thru items.—The term 'pass-thru item' means any item of income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit attributable to an interest in a partnership or S corporation. Such term shall not include any gain or loss from the disposition of an interest in an entity referred to in the preceding sentence.

"(iii) 10-percent owner.—The term '10-percent owner' means—

"(I) in the case of an S corporation, an individual who owns 10 percent or more (by vote or value) of the stock in such corporation, and

"(II) in the case of a partnership, an individual who owns 10 percent or more of the capital interest (or the profits interest) in such partnership, or who is a general partner.

"(iv) Special rule.—If no return is filed for the current year, any reference in this subparagraph or subparagraph (C) or (D) to an item shown on the return for the current year shall be treated as a reference to the actual amount of such item for such year.

"(v) Marital status.—Marital status shall be determined under section 7703."

(b) Technical Amendments.—

(1) Subparagraph (C) of section 6654(i)(1) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(C) the amount of such installment shall be equal to the required annual payment determined under subsection (d)(1)(B) by substituting '66 2/3 percent' for '90 percent' and without regard to subparagraph (C) of subsection (d)(1), and".

(2) Subparagraph (A) of section 6654(j)(3) of such Code is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "and subsection d(1)(C)(iii) shall not apply".

Subtitle D—General Budgetary Provisions

SEC. 431. EXEMPTION FROM SEQUESTRATION AND CONSIDERATION.

(a) No Sequestration of Unemployment Compensation.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, payments (including budget authority and outlays for administrative expenses incurred in connection with this Act) under titles I, II, and III of this Act (relating to emergency unemployment compensation) shall be exempt from any order issued under part C of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(b) Consideration of Amounts.—All receipts and direct spending amounts provided by the provisions of (and amendments made by) this Act (for all fiscal years) and all appropriations authorized by the provisions of (and amendments made by) this Act (for all fiscal years, whenever appropriated) shall be counted as zero for all purposes under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 and for the purposes of all points of order under the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, except that such amounts shall be considered for purposes of—

(1) construction of the baseline for the President's budget and the congressional budget under section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985; and

(2) adjustment of the maximum deficit amount under subsection (c).

(c) Adjustment of Maximum Deficit Amounts.—

(1) President's budget.—When the President submits the budget for fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995, in addition to any adjustments required by section 253 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the maximum deficit amounts for the budget year and all outyears through fiscal year 1995 (under section 601(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) shall be adjusted to reflect up-to-date reestimates of the effects on the deficit of the provisions of (and amendments made by) this Act (including budget authority and outlays for administrative expenses incurred in connection with this Act).

(2) Calculation.—The required increase or decrease under this subsection shall be calculated so that the maximum deficit amount shall be increased by the amount by which the provisions of (and amendments made by) this Act increase the deficit and the maximum deficit amount shall be decreased by the amount by which the provisions of (and amendments made by) this Act decrease the deficit.

(d) Definition.—For the purposes of this title, the term "administrative expenses incurred in connection with this Act" means an amount of $160,000,000 (in both budget authority and outlays) in fiscal year 1992, and includes amounts appropriated to implement section 303 of this Act, relating to the Advisory Council on Unemployment Compensation.

HAWAII: STRANGERS IN PARADISE

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I wish to bring to my colleagues' attention the premiere of a National Geographic special. I invite my colleagues, their families, and staff to tune in to PBS next Wednesday evening, November 13, and watch a remarkable documentary titled "Hawaii: Strangers in Paradise."

I have stood on this floor before, and I imagine I will again, to point out the plight of Hawaii's endangered plants and wildlife. "Strangers in Paradise" showcases the extremely fragile ecosystem of the Hawaiian Islands and discusses, for the first time before a nationwide audience, the biological emergency facing Hawaii.

I would also invite my colleagues to take a look at a report recently released by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the Hawaii Department of Land and Natural Resources, and the Nature Conservancy of Hawaii. This report is the first comprehensive inventory of Hawaii's flora and fauna and their habitat. The picture it paints is astonishing—and tragic.

Mark Twain once called the Hawaiian Islands the most lovely fleet of islands to lie anchored in any ocean. These islands are also the most isolated anywhere in the world—a fact which explains how Hawaii has come to host 10,000 native animal and plant species found nowhere else in the world.

And yet in spite of its stunning beauty and agreeable climate, Hawaii stands at the edge of an ecological abyss. Hawaii represents just two-tenths of 1 percent—0.2 percent—of the country's land mass, but accounts for more than 70 percent of the Nation's extinctions and more than one-quarter of its rare and endangered birds and plants. Indeed, Hawaii has the dubious honor of being known as the extinction capital of the world. It is a desperate battleground where the fight for survival is waged every day, and numerous plant and wildlife species are barely hanging on. Countless others have altogether disappeared.

Today's editions of the Christian Science Monitor and USA Today chronicle the plight of Hawaii's environment. In its lead sentence, the Monitor has accurately summarized Hawaii's problem as follows: "The Hawaiian Islands, home to 10,000 native animal and plant species found nowhere else on Earth—and the only tropical rain forests on United States soil—face a state of biological emergency."

The term "biological emergency" is not an overstatement. What Hawaii needs is an environmental call to arms.

Long before the first Polynesians came to Hawaii, nature was populating our islands at a very slow pace. Only an occasional insect or spore borne on the jet stream, or a bird blown off its migratory course, reached Hawaii. Sometimes these birds carried a plant seed in their feathers or droppings. But because Hawaii is 2,500 miles from any major land mass, such arrivals were a very rare event. Only once every 100,000 years did a new species successfully navigate the ocean or wind currents and establish itself. And because the introduction of new species proceeded so gradually, Hawaii's fragile tropical ecosystem had the time to adapt to these new visitors.

Now, all that has changed. When Europeans began to venture to Hawaii in the late 1770's, the introduction of new species accelerated dramatically. Whereas prior to the arrival of man only a single new species established itself every 100,000 years, today dozens reach our shores annually. Most of these alien species prey on native birds, plants, and insects, leaving a widening trail of biological decline and extinction.

Nearly 7 million people visit Hawaii each year, but the plight of Hawaii's threatened and endangered species is difficult to appreciate unless they travel to remote tropical habitats as I have. That is a unique and humbling experience, Mr. President, and perhaps the example of one of Hawaii's endangered species can give you some appreciation of how the struggle for survival is fought each day.

This morning's edition of USA Today tells the story of the 'o'o bird, and I would like to read a short passage from the article:

> A century ago, the Kauai 'o'o was a common little black bird whose songs echoed through the Hawaiian island swamps. But disease, probably carried by mosquitoes introduced to Hawaii by settlers, dwindled its numbers to just 12 in 1960 and two in 1981. Scientists watched the last known 'o'o in Kauai's Alakai wilderness build a nest each year and sing to attract a mate that never came. Then that songster disappeared in 1989.

The 'o'o may have sung its last verse. And unfortunately, the 'o'o is not alone. In Hawaii, we are witnessing the biological demise of countless plant and animal species that we, as humans, ultimately depend upon for our existence. Scientists estimate that humans rely on native organisms for nearly 75 percent of today's medicines and pharmaceutical products. With each passing day and with every new extinction, we lose more and more of the genetic material that could unlock a new cancer cure or provide the next generation of antibiotics. The profound concern I am addressing today relates to the ability of our race to survive and prosper.

Mr. President, I am ashamed of this terrible destruction and needless loss and even more ashamed of our Government's lack of will and action. In the Book of Genesis, God gave man dominion over the creatures of the earth, sea, and air. I fear mankind has broken this trust and not fully appreciated this gift, and we are about to reap the consequences.

But I am pleased that private, State, and Federal efforts have coalesced to produce this report entitled, "Hawaii's Extinction Crisis: A Call to Action." Despite the bleak picture painted by the report, it also points to a 10-point plan of action. The plan calls upon us to protect essential habitat for native species; provide stable and sufficient funding; create incentives for private landowners to protect endangered species and ecosystems on their property; halt the introduction of foreign pest species; strengthen conservation laws; increase scientific research and training; and raise public awareness.

These 10 points are essential to the recovery of Hawaii's ecological treasures. During the second session of the 102d Congress, I intend to propose legislation to implement this 10-point plan. During this first session, I have already taken action through a series of bills to address the threat of the brown tree snake, which has already caused the extinction of nine bird species in Guam. And I have held related hearings. But much, much more needs to be done.

Critics and naysayers will no doubt say, Why is this so important? Why should we care if an endangered snail or fern disappears? What difference does it make?

The point of all this, Mr. President, is not about one endangered bird or a threatened plant. The point is human survival and our role as caretakers of the Earth. Lose a bird or a plant species, and the planet will no doubt survive. But lose 100 or 1,000 species, then the planet grows ill and ecosystems come crashing down like a fragile house of cards. And if the Earth is no longer fit for animals to live upon, surely it will not be fit for humans, either.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of today's Christian Science Monitor and USA Today articles be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAWAIIAN ISLANDS FACE EXTENSIVE ECOLOGICAL PERIL

(By Daniel B. Wood)

The Hawaiian Islands, home to 10,000 native animal and plant species found nowhere else on earth—and the only tropical rain forests on United States soil—face a state of biological emergency.

A decade of private, state, and federal efforts have coalesced with the first comprehensive inventory of birds, plants, fish, animal life and habitat since statehood (1959). Due for release tomorrow, the new report by the US Fish and Wildlife Service, the Hawaii Department of Land and Natural Resources, and Natural Resources, and The Nature Conservancy of Hawaii includes several dire conclusions:

Nearly two-thirds of Hawaii's original forest cover has been lost, including 50 percent of vital rain forests. Ninety percent of lowland plains, once forested, have been destroyed.

Of 140 listed species of native birds, only 70 remain, 33 of which are endangered. Eleven more are beyond recovery.

As of this month, 37 Hawaiian plant species were federally listed as endangered. Within two years, 152 more will be proposed. Among the state's rarest plants are 93 species with no more than 100 known individual plants—including trees, shrubs, vines, herbs, and ferns. At least five species have been reduced to one individual.

"These three organizations have come together in the recognition that with all that has been and is being done, we are losing the battle," says Michael Buck, administrator of the Hawaii Division of Forestry and Wildlife. "The facts are quite sobering."

The cause of the decline is twofold: 1) a cumulative effect of land conversion to agriculture, ranching, and residential use; 2) introduction of non-native species of insects and mammals.

The state is particularly vulnerable to both as the most isolated land mass on Earth.

"Until man came, these islands were lucky to get one new species every 10,000 years," says Alan Holt, director of science and stewardship for the Nature Conservancy.

The influx of feral pigs, goats, horses, and cattle began in the 1700s. A crossroads of Pacific travel and trade, the islands have seen a dramatic increase in foreign pests in the last 15 years.

"Now when a new prey is introduced, it can wreak havoc," Mr. Holt says.

Native birds have been hard hit by malaria and pox brought by mosquitoes, for instance. Brown tree snakes, which have devastated bird species on Guam, have been intercepted on flights to Hawaii six times.

The banana poka, a passion-flower vine which is kept in check in native South America by feeding insects, has no such predator in Hawaii. The vine has smothered 70,000 acres of forests on two islands and is threatening larger tracts.

Loss of forests, plants, and wildlife impact every level of the state's economy and cultural heritage.

The report chronicles the danger of losing forests that intercept and generate rainfall, protect coral beaches from siltation, and generate unique materials for clothing, textiles, ornaments, canoes, and scientific study. The islands surpass even the Galapagos Islands off South America in numbers of species evolving from a single ancestor.

At least 50 species have evolved from a single common ancestor in Hawaii.

To bring awareness to the new findings, study sponsors have adopted a 10-point action plan that includes acquiring habitat and funding long-term stewardship of publicly-owned natural areas. Networks of state, federal, and private areas are joining into mega-reserves large enough to sustain populations of endangered bird species.

"We're finding it's not enough just to set aside land in a protectorate," says Dr. Joan Canfield, a botanist with the US Fish and Wildlife Service. "It needs to be actively managed for invasive plants and animals."

Propagation programs have already started, including captive rearing in zoos and botanical gardens. The nene (Hawaiian goose) and koloa (Hawaiian duck) have been bred successfully.

Besides new attempts to halt the flow of foreign pests into Hawaii—modeled after a successful campaign in New Zealand—the groups are lobbying for further landowner incentives to protect endangered species on their properties, increased effectiveness of conservation laws, and more extensive research.

To heighten public awareness, the report is timed to precede a major National Geographic television special. Entitled "Hawaii: Strangers in Paradise," the show airs on PBS Wednesday, Nov. 13.

"This report in a sense says the sky is falling on one of the most remarkable paradises on earth," notes Kelvin Taketa, director of the Pacific Region for the Nature Conservancy. "We're hoping it can help coalesce the kind of broad-based, national support that can help reverse the trend."

"SILENT EXTINCTIONS" BEFALLS HAWAII'S FLORA, FAUNA

(By Linda Kanamine)

A century ago, the Kauai 'o'o (pronounced OH-OH) was a common little black bird whose songs echoed through the Hawaiian island swamps.

But disease, probably carried by mosquitoes introduced to Hawaii by settlers, dwindled its number to just 12 in 1960 and two in 1981.

Scientists watched the last known 'o'o in Kauai's Alaskai wilderness build a nest each year and sing to attract a mate that never came. Then that songster disappeared by 1989.

Similar sagas have occurred over and over in the Aloha State—home to less than 1% of the nation's land mass, yet nearly 75% of its documented plant and animals extinctions, says a new report out today.

"There's trouble in paradise," says David Klinger of the Fish and Wildlife Service.

The status report, written with the Nature Conservancy of Hawaii and the Hawaii Department of Land and Natural Resources, heralds increasing attention to Pacific troubles, Klinger says. Next: 189 Hawaiian plants will be proposed for endangered status.

Hawaii's primeval wilderness has been overtaken by foreign plants and animals (pigs, parrots, pineapple, sugar cane, amoung others), and diseases, carried to the islands beginning 1,500 years ago first by Polynesians, then waves of Europeans and Asians.

An average 12 new species each year invade Hawaii. Scientists now are watching for the brown tree snake from Guam, a ravenous predator that eats birds and bird eggs, in otherwise snake-free Hawaii.

Today, another prime culprit is development that clears native habitat for agriculture, ranching and homes.

At least half of more than 140 bird species are extinct. Of the 70 species remaining, 33 are endangered and 11 of those already may be beyond help.

37 types of plants are on the U.S. endangered species list. Among the rarest: 93 species with fewer than 100 individual plants left. Five have just a single plant remaining.

24 species of Oahu tree snails—part of native folklore—can no longer be found.

Two-thirds of original forest cover is lost, including half of rain forests.

On Wednesday, PBS airs a National Geographic special, Hawaii: Strangers in Paradise, taking a look at the crisis.

"Our goal is to alert people," says Carol Fox of the Nature Conservancy of Hawaii. "We worry about rain forests in Brazil and tend to think ours are all right. Well they're not."

Among 10 urgent actions recommended to stern the tide of extinctions:

Buy or set aside more habitat for native species.

Offer incentives for private landowners to protect endangered species and habitat on their properties.

Stop influx of foreign pest species.

Stiffen conservation laws and penalties.

Expand intensive rescue efforts of "species on the brink" of extinction.

Environmental damage is easy to understand when the culprit is a bulldozer, Fox says.

"But when it's the silent extinction of thousands of species on beautiful Hawaii, which you always thought was paradise, it's hard to understand the urgency. If we don't do something we could lose the battle."

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SUPPORT FOR PROPOSED LAND EXCHANGE

HON. JOE SKEEN

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Speaker, on November 1, 1990, I signed a letter to Secretary of the Interior Manuel Lujan expressing support for a proposed land exchange between the Potlatch Corp. and the Federal Government. Potlatch is interested in swapping a large block of forested bottomland in Arkansas and a small strip of Idaho riverfront property for scattered federally owned timberland parcels of equal economic value in northern Idaho. I expressed the hope that "we can proceed with a legislative initiative in the upcoming Congress to carry out the exchange." A review of the considerable congressional support for this exchange may be instructive.

On September 20, 1990, Senator SIMPSON and Senator WALLOP cosigned a letter to Secretary Lujan supporting the exchange. The letter stated that "the potential acquisition of such a large continuous tract of wetlands including bottomland, which bridges the gap between two extraordinary existing wildlife refuges, in exchange for scattered woodlands in Idaho would be a rare opportunity to promote both increased efficiency in management of Federal lands and compelling environmental values." That letter followed a similar July 31, 1990 communication to the Secretary from Senator BUMPERS and Senator McClure supporting the exchange. As pointed out in the July 31, 1990 letter, "the lower White River-Cache River-Bayou Deview floodplain, which includes the Potlatch holdings, was designated as a 'Wetlands of International Importance' under the Ramsar Convention."

Additionally, Senate Appropriations Committee Report 101–534 to accompany the fiscal year 1991 Interior appropriations bill indicated that the "Committee supports the exchange proposal and urges the Department to proceed as expeditiously as possible with the necessary appraisals and other actions required to conclude the negotiations and develop appropriate legislation for congressional consideration."

The joint explanatory statement of the committee of conference to accompany the October 27, 1990 conference report on the Interior appropriations bill, H.R. 5769, stated that the "language and allocations set forth in House Report 101–789 and Senate Report 101–534 shall be complied with unless specifically addressed to the contrary in the conference report and accompanying statement of the managers."

On October 17, 1991 the joint explanatory statement of the committee of conference in the fiscal year 1992 Interior appropriations bill gave fresh and renewed emphasis to the importance of the land exchange negotiations. Contained in House Report 102–256 to accompany H.R. 2686 is language by the managers as follows:

> The managers are concerned about the apparent lack of meaningful progress in negotiations between the Department and the Potlatch Corp. regarding the transfer to the Fish and Wildlife Service of wetlands owned by Potlatch in Arkansas in exchange for public lands in Idaho. The managers continue to support an equal value exchange as a means of acquiring prime wetland habitat for public use, and continue to urge the Department to proceed as expeditiously as possible with the necessary actions required to conclude the negotiations.

In light of the crystal clear congressional directives and key expressions of support, the pace of negotiations for the exchange should be quickened substantially. This is a very important environmental initiative. Enabling legislation should be enacted in this Congress. A recent summary of the exchange situation is attached to my statement:

SUMMARY OF THE PROPOSED EXCHANGE—U.S. FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE, POTLATCH CORP., BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT

The U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service's North American Waterfowl Plan identified approximately 56,000 acres of Potlatch Corporation lands in east-central Arkansas, along the Cache and White Rivers a significant wintering habitat for migrating waterfowl. Subsequently, Potlatch and the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service have reached an agreement in concept for offering Potlatch's Arkansas land to the Fish & Wildlife Service in exchange for federal timberland of equal value in northern Idaho.

Under the agreement, BLM land transferred to Potlatch in northern Idaho would be located outside of designated BLM management areas. In addition, approximately 8,500 acres of BLM lands within the Grandmother Mountain, Marble Creek and Lemonade Peak areas would be transferred to the Forest Service in exchange for the transfer of Forest Service lands of equal value to Potlatch. Additional three-way exchanges involving BLM and Forest Service will be structured as necessary to balance exchange values.

As part of the exchange agreement, Potlatch would convey to the Forest Service approximately 640 acres of Potlatch inholding in the Grandmother Mountain area. In addition, Potlatch would convey to the BLM approximately 900 acres in the Rochat Divide Management Area, 240 acres in the Lolo Creek Management Area and portions of Potlatch's 30 miles of abandoned railroad right-of-way along the St. Joe river.

GENERAL SUPPORT FOR THE EXCHANGE

Arkansas: there is strong local support from the Arkansas Game and fish Commission, the Governor, local politicians, community leaders, the Arkansas Heritage Commission, Nature Conservancy and other conservation groups.

Idaho: the concept of the exchange has support from the Idaho Department of Lands, the Idaho Panhandle National Forest, other forest industry and local and state politicians. In addition, Potlatch has described the proposal to several conservation groups, including The Wilderness Society, Idaho Conservation League, The Nature Conservancy of Idaho, Sierra Club and several wildlife organizations. Groups who have heard the details of the plan have identified no negative Idaho impacts. Potlatch has also contacted and received support from the Clearwater Resource Coalition and the St. Joe Valley Association.

HOW WILL IT HAPPEN?

Congressional Action: Complex intra-agency exchanges such as this must be facilitated by specific federal legislation. Hence, the support of Congressional delegations of Arkansas and Idaho is essential. A first step was taken in July of 1990 with a letter, jointly signed by Senators Dale Bumpers of Arkansas and James McClure of Idaho, advising Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan of their support for the exchange and urging him to facilitate the exchange within his department. A further step was taken during the fall of 1990 when the Senate Interior Committee included the following in its report on the Interior Appropriations bill:

"The Committee is aware of ongoing negotiations between the Department (Fish & Wildlife) and the Potlatch Corporation regarding the transfer to the Fish & Wildlife Service lands owned by Potlatch in Arkansas in exchange for public lands of equal value in Idaho. Such an exchange will ultimately require congressional approval. The Committee supports the exchange proposal and urges the Department to process as expeditiously as possible with the necessary appraisals and other actions required to conclude the negotiations and develop appropriate legislation for congressional consideration."

Agency Action: the Forest Service and Fish and Wildlife Services are engaged in appraising and screening various land parcels identified as candidates for trade. BLM lands selected to date have been further screened through the Idaho Heritage Program to determine if any environmental sensitivity exists.

APPRAISALS

Appraisals are being conducted in Arkansas and Idaho by independent appraisers. Potlatch has no input to the appraisal process.

The appraisal will proceed in two phases. Phase I identifies primarily BLM lands within Potlatch's operating region. If sufficient value isn't identified in Phase I, Potlatch may select additional lands north of Coeur d'Alene and south of the Salmon River, with plans of effecting other exchanges to move back into the company's operating areas. Selection and appraisal of USFS lands will also occur during the second phase.

NEPA

In compliance with the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), a full environmental review of the proposed action will be completed. Included in the NEPA requirements are opportunities for public input. Multiple public meetings will be held in North Idaho.

ADVANTAGES

Aside from providing wetlands in Arkansas as desired by the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service, a prime advantage of the exchange is that it allows the Forest Service to block up its ownership where it is intermingled with BLM lands. In addition, Potlatch's conveying portions of the railroad right-of-way along the St. Joe River to BLM will allow that agency to develop recreational facilities and enhance the value of that area for public use. BLM lands transferred to Potlatch will be open to the public for traditional forest recreation use. Furthermore, the established working relationship between Potlatch and the Idaho Fish and Game Department will incorporate wildlife considerations into the management of the acquired lands. Potlatch intends to continue to allow public access to its 620,000 acres in northern Idaho.

JOSEPH "GUS" GUZINSKI: HONORED FOR LOYAL SERVICE

HON. TIMOTHY J. PENNY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, any list of prominent Democrats in southeastern Minnesota would have to include the gentleman being honored by the Olmsted County Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party this weekend for many years of devoted service.

Joseph "Gus" Guzinski of Rochester, MN, epitomizes the strength of political activism in Michigan. Never seeking the limelight for himself, he is content to play an active role behind the scenes. Gus was born into politics some 65 years ago, following in the footsteps of his father, who was involved in the Democratic Party and in the merger that became the Minnesota DFL.

Gus is being recognized for 25 documented years of service as Olmsted County DFL treasurer, although his party activity "predates recorded history," at least in county circles. In these years as county treasurer, he's become known not only as a sharp man with the figures but as one of the most politically astute individuals in our State. His down-to-earth advice and impeccable honesty are well known and deeply appreciated by all of us who have come under Gus's political tutelage.

Gus is very generous to his friends and allies and displays tremendous loyalty on all fronts. He's quietly provided support—both financial and advisory—to many candidates in our area.

As I mentioned, he is known for his keen political judgment. Some may have questioned his wisdom when, in 1982, he took a chance on a relatively unknown and untested young man from New Richland who was running for Congress. Gus knew that no Democrat had represented southeastern Minnesota in Congress in 92 years, so the eager young man was truly a long shot. I was pleased and humbled when Gus stepped forward to give me his backing during that campaign. His support meant a lot to me then and means even more to me now after 9 years of his friendship.

Gus is also known for his quick wit, his forthrighteness and dedication to the Democratic Party. Perhaps he shares the belief of Will Rogers, who said: "You've got to be an optimist to be a Democrat, and you've got to be a humorist to stay one." Goodness knows, being a Democrat in the First District all these years required plenty of optimism and humor, not to mention persistence and perseverance.

I am proud to join his many friends throughout Minnesota, his children, Joe Guzinski, Jr., and Cheri Clark of Rochester, and his three grandchildren in saluting Joe "Gus" Guzinski. It's folks like Gus who really give strength to our political system. Congratulations to Gus on a job well done.

CONCEPT HOUSE OPENS NEW DRUG REHABILITATION CENTER FOR COCAINE MOTHERS AND THEIR AT-RISK NEWBORNS

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, Concept House in Miami, is a nonprofit organization that provides rehabilitation and recovery services for chemically dependent adults. Concept House has initiated a new program to decrease the number of cocaine addicted mothers and protect their at-risk newborns. The Concept House Day Care Program helps the mothers of newborn babies to remain drug free and to properly care for their children.

The program will be located in a special facility which will house 16 mothers and their children and provide 6 months of intensive treatment. While these mothers attend the day care program, they will benefit from special classes which help them successfully adapt to motherhood and a drug-free lifestyle.

The funds for the purchase of the building, as well as funding for the program, has been provided by grants received from the Florida Health and Rehabilitative Services, Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Agency. Capital Bank also plays an important role in providing permanent financing for the project.

I would like to recognize the leadership of Ms. Polly E. Jones, the executive director of Concept House, for her efforts to make this much needed program possible. Ms. Jones has helped develop a drug treatment program that targets women's special needs, an approach often overlooked. I am confident that the efforts of Concept House will become a model in caring for addicted pregnant women and mothers in south Florida.

NEW HOPE FOR PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, two recent articles by prominent Middle East scholars leave reason to believe that peace in the Middle East is attainable. In their articles, Andrei Shoumikhin and Steven L. Spiegel, "Don't Give Up Hope Yet," New York Times, November 4, 1991, and Martin Indyk, "Taking Baby Steps Into a Brave New World," The Los Angeles Times, November 5, 1991, cite several factors, most significant of which is the end of the cold war, why there is cause for optimism about the prospects for peace in the post-Madrid Middle East.

The combination of Palestinian pragmatism, Syrian isolationism, Shamir's acceptance of the process and American influence and leverage over the regional players all work in favor of a positive outcome to the 43-year-old Arab-Israeli conflict. While it will take time to overcome the many obstacles to peace, particularly the continuing intransigence that characterizes the regime of Hafez al-Assad, the Madrid conference has demonstrated that our efforts may not be in vain.

I strongly urge my colleagues to review these refreshing and insightful articles.

DON'T GIVE UP HOPE YET

(By Andrei Shoumikhin and Steven L. Spiegel)

LOS ANGELES.—Imagine a Mideast peace conference in which tough proponents of the Arab and Israeli causes find themselves transformed by meetings with one another. What if they are soon enjoying cordial dinners and kissing each other on the cheek—developing ties they did not think were possible?

Picture a conference where a former radical Palestinian says at a closing dinner: "I have learned so much. I need to learn much more." And an Israeli right-winger comments, with tears in his eyes, "The Arabs and Israelis understand the Middle East, not you Americans and Soviets."

You don't believe it? Well, this did not happen in Madrid, but it did occur in Moscow a week ago when Arab, Israeli, Western and Soviet experts met for four days under the auspices of the Institute on Global Conflict and Cooperation of the University of California and the U.S.A.-Canada Institute in Moscow to discuss Middle East initiatives. We were the meeting's cochairmen. There were no idealists at these sessions, which consisted not of official negotiators but of scholars simulating peace talks. In Palestinian-Israeli and Syrian-Israeli dialogues, the disagreements sounded like debates of government officials.

Despite these differences, the chemistry worked and incredible events followed. Because the Soviet and American sponsors were in complete agreement, their cooperation was contagious for both Arabs and Israelis. The Mideast players were forced to communicate in ways impossible during the cold war when it was tempting to play Washington and Moscow against each other.

The experts in Moscow agreed that the new Arab-Israeli peace process should begin with a declaration of principles on procedures, covering matters like the commitment to negotiate continuously and to deal in good faith with the aim of resolving outstanding issues. The participants stressed that once agreement was reached on procedures, it could create a precedent for later accords, averting the need to start all over again. An Arab delegate argued: "Don't insult us. Don't just deal as Americans and Israelis always do with only technicalities or tactics."

To take advantage of the early positive atmosphere, participants were encouraged to take on difficult issues such as arms control, economic cooperation and negotiating procedures.

Then the shocks began. The Arabs and Israelis took a common approach on specific issues and opposed the stands of the great powers. For example, the Mideast participants argued that foreign aid was critical to the peace process and that economic reforms could not be pressed too strongly during the delicate adjustment period—positions at odds with the U.S., European and Soviet view. Mideast players also voiced support for a moratorium on arms shipments and new arms sales to their region for the duration of the talks.

All participants agreed that talks could succeed only if difficult issues like nuclear weapons, the status of Jerusalem and the P.L.O.'s role were deferred until agreements had been reached on other matters.

Are these meetings relevant to Madrid? Yes, because they were attended by former generals and diplomats, well-placed academics and journalists with close ties to their governments. The Moscow sessions demonstrated that good faith, good cheer, good will and work on practical issues can make a difference under the right circumstances. With all the acrimony in Madrid, our experience suggests that away from the limelight, compromise is possible.

Most participants entered the Moscow meeting skeptical about the success of the Madrid conference. Despite their continued disagreement, most left Moscow at least somewhat more optimistic. An Arab admitted that he had never previously understood the variety of Israeli views; he had always thought simply of one Israel. And an Israeli hard-liner commented: "This is a scary conference; the Arabs are so likable."

[From the Los Angeles Times, Nov. 5, 1991]

TAKING BABY STEPS INTO A BRAVE NEW WORLD

(By Martin Indyk)

When Arab and Israeli delegates entered the Hall of Columns at the Madrid Peace Conference, weighed down with the baggage of their nightmarish past, they took a small step into a brave new world.

To the outside viewer, the success of this peace conference was difficult to discern. It ended in acrimonious exchanges more bitter than the opening speeches and a final admonition from "Schoolmaster of State" James A. Baker III for the failure to deal adequately with the human dimension of the conflict. It took two more days of cajoling the Syrians before the secretary of state was able to announce the commencement of direct, bilateral negotiations—the very objective of this opening spectacle.

And yet, in the end, even the recalcitrant Syrians proved willing to get away from the cameras and down to the negotiations behind closed doors. The Israeli and Jordanian-Palestinian delegations—defying Syrian objections— emerged from their initial encounter with handshakes for the cameras.

Madrid was a climactic event generated by forces set in motion by the ending of the Cold War and the defeat of Saddam Hussein. And Madrid in turn has generated four positive elements that bode well for the negotiating process begun there.

PRAGMATISM

The mere presence of Palestinians in a joint delegation, seated across the table from Israel's prime minister, was a major achievement for the Palestinians and a plus for the peace process. In five decades of conflict, the Palestinians have never shown sufficient pragmatism to secure Israeli recognition. This time they did not miss the opportunity even though it required difficult decisions and a large measure of self-restraint.

The Palestinians came to the table without the Palestine Liberation Organization, without Jerusalemites and without a settlements freeze. Their speech respected the constraints on invoking the PLO, which prevented an Israeli walkout. Of all the Arab delegates, they came closest to addressing Israel's concerns in their recognition of Israeli suffering and their appeal for coexistence. And this approach earned them a direct response from Israel's prime minister who addressed them as "our closest neighbors," stressed the importance he attached to reaching an accommodation with them and appealed to them to "join us in negotiations."

No appeal was necessary. This Palestinian pragmatism reflects their sense of weakness and urgency in the wake of the Gulf War, which discredited the PLO and undermined the intifada. And it reflects the shift in the balance of power from the Tunis-based PLO to the nationalist leadership in the territories. Madrid witnessed the partial eclipse of Yasser Arafat by Faisal Husseini and his newly empowered and legitimized team of leaders from the "inside." They have a very large stake in changing the status quo in the territories. The negotiations on interim arrangements provide them with the opportunity to end Israel's military government and take control of their own affairs. For 13 years the Palestinians had spurned this Camp David approach, but in Madrid they formally accepted it and announced their readiness to begin direct negotiations regardless of Syrian opposition.

SYRIAN ISOLATION

Madrid also revealed Syria's weakness. This was evident in the changed status of Syria's former superpower patron. As President Mikhail Gorbachev emphasized by his bizarre opening speech, the Soviet Union is preoccupied with turmoil at home and content to follow Washington's script in the Middle East.

But Syria's isolation was more starkly revealed in its manifest failure to exercise control over the positions of the other Arab parties engaged in the peace process. By the time the parties convened in Madrid, Syria had already failed to prevent other Arab states from agreeing to engage in the multilateral talks with Israel over regional issues. Twelve Arab states have now committed to these talks, including the Saudi-led Gulf Cooperation Council. As if to underscore Syria's failure, Foreign Minister Farouk Shareh's reiterated Syrian opposition, only to be publicly rebuffed by the two co-sponsors and the European and Egyptian participants.

And then, after parading before the world the crude and vicious nature of the Syrian regime, Shareh demonstrated weakness by trying, unsuccessfully, to block the commencement of bilateral talks. Syria had expected the Madrid conference to expose Israel's isolation and bring the pressure of "international legitimacy" to bear on its policies. But Shareh's style and tactics backfired dramatically. Syria, not Israel, emerged isolated, intransigent and the most uncomfortable with the new post-Cold War world.

This is Hafez Assad's worst nightmare—that he has fired the starting gun in a race in which the other Arab horses are more eager to run than his and he can no longer hold them back. Previously, he had the option of insisting, by hook or by crook, on an Arab consensus that proceeded at Damascus' pace. But now, even the Saudis, who used to do his bidding, are acting against his wishes and supporting a new Arab consensus that abandons Assad to the choice of being left behind or striving to catch up.

SHAMIR'S ENGAGEMENT

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's presence at the Madrid conference table marks a personal transformation from the naysayer who blocked peace initiatives to the leader who now embraces them. Like the Palestinians, in coming to the table Shamir had to swallow much that was unpalatable to him. He did not want an international conference, he did not want the PLO associated with the process and he strongly objected to the evaluation of the Palestinian delegation to equal status. Shamir also entered the process knowing that the Bush Administration is fundamentally opposed to his most cherished beliefs—retention of Judea and Samaria and settlement of Jews there.

Yet he came to Madrid with the solid backing of the most right-wing government in Israel's history. And he leaves Madrid, after sitting stoically through excoriations and slander, still committed to "negotiating without interruption until an agreement is reached." His speech closed no doors and actually hinted at the possibility of territorial compromise if it was preceded by confidence-building measures and development of relations.

AMERICAN INFLUENCE

It is obvious that Madrid would have never occurred without the active intervention of Baker. There can be no doubt that the parties came to the table in large measure because of the "off the table" benefits that might be gained from the United States. With the end of the Cold War, the Middle East powers have lost much of their leverage over the United States. Baker now knows that the mere threat of assigning blame and walking away—as he did again over the weekend—is sufficient to introduce flexibility into previously fixed positions.

Many in America wonder why the United States should bother with what looks more than ever like an intractable problem when so many other pressing interests at home and abroad deserve attention. What they fail to understand, however, is that the very fact that the United States needs Middle East peace less than the parties themselves, puts us at a tremendous advantage. Arabs and Israelis now have to prove to us that they want peace if they are to secure American involvement. Put simply, they now need us more than we need them.

Madrid was hardly the transforming event that many expected. Its achievement of Arab recognition of Israel and Israeli recognition of the Palestinians was begrudging at best. Yet Madrid was a learning process for students badly in need of education. Some were quicker learners than others, but each discovered that they could make difficult compromises and still survive. And the United States, in its role a schoolmaster rather than catalyst, has proved capable of teaching each side to go beyond the constraints established by four decades of conflict and accept the previously unacceptable. The message of Madrid is faint but discernable: Middle East peace is possible.

CONGRATULATIONS TO ANDREW VOTO

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great respect and admiration that I address my colleagues in the House today, for I rise to extend my heartiest congratulations and warmest best wishes to Chief Andrew Voto on the occasion of his retirement as chief of police in Lodi, NJ.

Chief Voto began his career with the Lodi Police Department after returning from military service during World War II where he served in the Pacific Theater with the U.S. Navy. He is a man dedicated to law enforcement and serving his community. Chief Voto has received a long list of awards and commendations, including being named "Cop of the Year" by the Lodi Jacyees and by the American Legion, receiving the Distinguished Service Award from the American Heart Fund Association, and being named "Man of the Year" by the Italian-American Forum.

Chief Voto initiated many innovative programs within the Lodi Police Department. Among his many accomplishments was the development of a comprehensive and advanced juvenile antidrug program in the Lodi school system. He has extensive and impressive special training in many areas of law enforcement.

Chief Voto and his wife Matilda have been married for over 40 years. They have two daughters, Louise and Andrea, and two grandchildren, Andrew and Mark. Chief Voto is a man well respected by all who know him. He has shared his time and talent, enthusiasm and energy with the town of Lodi, and I am sure he will continue to be committed to his community.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join in paying tribute to this exceptional man. He is among those outstanding few who truly make a difference in society.

FUNDACION ARTISTICA CUBANA AMERICANA

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to recognize the Cuban-American Artistic Foundation for their celebration commemorating Cuban artists of the visual and fine arts who have passed away while living in exile. The organization celebrated a mass on the 4th of October at St. Michael's Church in Miami to honor these artists who left their country in a desperate search for freedom.

The Cuban-American Artistic Foundation is an organization created by Cuban artists in order to bring together those artists who have come from Cuba to the United States seeking liberty.

The members of the executive board of the FACA include Homero Gutierrez, president; Tito Hernandez and Carlos Irigoyen Sierra, vice presidents; Vicky Lester, secretary; Elsa Valladares, treasurer; Frank Soto Pujol, public relations. The board also includes a delegate for each of the arts, including theater, television and film actors, vocalists dancers, radio and broadcast professionals, and musicians.

Among the many interests and projects of this organization, it has created a network of possible opportunities for artists who are temporarily unemployed. They have also created a learning facility called La Case Del Artista for the benefit of new artists to develop their talents.

The foundation was established in 1986 and has organized several works since then. The latest theatrical performance, "Entre Nosotros" held at the Manuel Artime Theater on the 13th of July.

It is my hope to convey to others the dedication and commitment of those involved in their organization for the good of our community. Their work and their decision to serve the people is certainly commendable.

JOSEPH APICELLA AND THE PALENESE SOCIETY: ITALIAN-AMERICAN VALUES ENRICHING THE PEOPLE OF YONKERS

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to share many of the values of the Italian-American community—traditional values like a strong work ethic, love of family, respect for law and order, and reverence for this great country of ours. These values are embodied by the Palenese Society, a Yonkers-based group that works to keep alive the Italian-American spirit and all that it represents.

Tomorrow evening, the Palenese Society will hold its 81st annual dinner dance. This year's event is particularly noteworthy because the society will be paying tribute to an outstanding individual, Joseph Apicella. He is an active member of the Italian-American community and gives his all to make Yonkers a better place for all.

A graduate of the Yonkers public schools and of Mercy College in Dobbs Ferry, NY, Joe Apicella started his career in public service as an aide in the office of the Westchester County Clerk before dedicating himself to his home town as a city assessor's aide in Yonkers. He has worked for the city of Yonkers every since, moving from that first position to that of city real estate coordinator. In 1988, he moved on to the position of downtown manager, one of the most significant in city government. In the 2 years that he served in that position, he coordinated economic development programs, business recruitment, and the New York State Economic Development Zone Program. Working together with the Yonkers Police Department and the Department of Sanitation, he provided leadership to the downtown area, working hard to revitalize that all-important part of Yonkers.

A loving husband and doting father of two young children, Joe takes an active part in the civic life of his community. In addition to serving as vice president of the Palenese Society, he is a member of the Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Yonkers Board of Directors, of the Yonkers Police/Fire Memorial Committee, the St. Donato Society, and the Yonkers Brotherhood Committee. He was the grand marshal of Yonkers' Columbus Day celebration in 1987, and has served as a delegate to the Congress of Italian American Organizations, as well as a member of several professional societies.

By applying in his own life the values that the Palenese Society represents, he has made himself a success and has enriched the lives of his family, his community, and all who know him. His example reflects the strengths of this organization, and it is a privilege to join many others in paying tribute to Joseph Apicella and all of the Palenese Society's members.

THE CONGRESSIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY ACT OF 1991

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, along with 26 of my House colleagues, the Congressional Accountability Act of 1991. Over the last few decades the belief that "the Congress can do no wrong" has taken hold in this institution. Like the English barons who joined forces at Runnymede in 1215 to challenge King John's heavy taxation and abuse of power, we are today introducing legislation that says, in effect, that the abusive reign of this Congress must end. Like the Magna Carta developed at that time, this legislation would require the Kings here on Capitol Hill to abide by the same rules and regulations that we impose on the rest of society.

Congress has exempted itself from laws that regulate the terms and conditions of employment, the health and safety of employees, and the rights and responsibilities of employers. These laws are familiar to all of us—the Social Security Act of 1933, the National Labor Relations Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, the Privacy Act of 1974, the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, and the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990.

Admittedly, the Congress has made several feeble attempts to apply these laws to itself, but these efforts have not provided congressional employees with any real protections. Congressional employees who believe they have been aggrieved under one of these laws cannot appeal their cases to Federal district court. Instead, the Congress simultaneously wears the hats of defendant, prosecutor, jury, trial judge and appeals judge and resolves all employee grievances in house. It was that sort of abuse of power—the attitude that the "King can do no wrong"—that prompted the development of the Magna Carta. Indeed, there would be outrage in the halls of this institution if we ever gave private corporations the same sort of immunity that we in the Congress have given ourselves with respect to these laws.

Our Founding Fathers, too, would be appalled at the very notion of a congressional exemption from a law relating to civil rights or the health and safety of employees. James Madison wrote in the Federalist Papers that "Congress can make no law which will not have its full operation on themselves and their friends, as well as on the great mass of society." He understood that a government that exempts itself from the laws it imposes on others will, like King John's abusive regime, quickly lose touch with the people.

Every congressional office is, in a sense, like a small business. Members pay staff according to different pay scales; we allocate resources between our Washington and district offices differently; we purchase computer systems that are unique to our individual needs. But, because we have exempted ourselves from so many laws, we never have to face the consequences of the laws we pass.

We do not have to forego certain material things or reduce our payroll as a result of complying with the Americans with Disabilities Act. Private sector entities must face that choice every day. We do not waste valuable time locked in protracted litigation over frivilous claims brought under one of these laws. Yet that has become an expensive part of doing business in this Nation. Every day businesses forego modernization or expansion because of expenses they incur under one or more of these laws. How can the Congress make intelligent decisions with respect to the impact of these rules and regulations on the private sector if we immunize ourselves from them here in Washington?

My legislation not only requires the Congress to abide by these laws, but it guarantees that employees will be able to appeal adverse outcomes in the appropriate Federal district court. The right to judicial appeal is an essential element of any attempt to make the Congress accountable to these laws.

Let's send a message to the American people that the Congress is willing to play by the same rules as the rest of society. We must acknowledge that the King can do wrong and that even the King can be held accountable for his actions.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor my legislation.

ATLANTIS ACADEMY GIVES FRESH START TO STRUGGLING STUDENTS

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Atlantis Academy which was recently featured in the Miami Herald. The article "Atlantis gives struggling kids a fresh start" by Jon O'Neill tells how the 15-year-old private school has helped students who are slow learners or have learning disabilities:

If it weren't for Atlantis Academy, 18-year-old Alex Uriarte might be just another dropout statistic.

When Alex went to Coral Park High three years ago, he was overwhelmed. He fell behind and stopped going to class, once skipping 32 days in a row. Not the stuff of which diplomas are made.

But Atlantis changed that. The school caters to kids who are slow learners or who have learning disabilities or reading handicaps. Its goal is to make school a fun and rewarding experience instead of a burden. It worked for Alex.

"Coral Park was so big, I got lost fast," he said. "After that, it was kind of pointless for me just to sit there. But here, I work at my own pace, and the teachers pay attention and are real consistent in giving me help."

Alex will graduate this year. He has set his sights on studying marine biology in college. Two years ago, college wasn't in the picture.

"I would have laughed at the idea," he said.

Atlantis, at 9600 SW 107th Ave., is full of stories like Alex's. It now has 180 students in kindergarten through 12th grade. With a 7-1 student-teacher ratio, the kids are assured of getting plenty of individual attention.

"It's like a family here," said Joy Davies, who teaches high school language arts. "We try to tap into each child's potential and find out what they're good at. We want to teach them to use their disabilities."

Atlantis was founded in 1976 by Tish Tepper, who rented space in an empty Kendall church for 35 students. The next year, Zelda Carner became a co-director of the school. The school built its first building in 1980, adding more space in 1982 and 1985.

Kids are admitted into the school based on evaluations and interviews with the student and their parents. School officials said they rarely turn anyone away. Tuition is $7,400 a year.

In class, students are divided into teams that cut across grade levels. They set at U-shaped tables, facing the teacher. Most teachers are charged with devising a curriculum to meet the needs of their classes. Few books are used. Computers are a staple in almost every room.

Students are usually involved in demonstrations that help them learn. Thursday, for instance, kids in junior and senior high classes studied math by making milkshakes from recipes.

The Atlantis approach to learning helped Chelle Bentley, an 18-year-old senior. Chelle actually did drop out of school when she lived in Lawton, Okla. She never thought she would graduate. Now, Chelle wants to study photography in college next year.

"I couldn't understand things, so my grades were bad," she said. "But here, they work with you and help you understand.

Watching students like Alex and Chelle succeed is what keeps Atlantis teachers going, Davies said. The job can be taxing at times, but the rewards are great.

"It's like saving people from drowning," Davies said. "Most of these kids just need someone to understand them."

I am happy to pay tribute to the school's founder Zelda Carner, and the staff of the Atlantis Academy by reprinting this article from the Miami Herald. The Atlantis Academy should be proud of its success in turning potential high school dropouts into potential college graduates.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION REGARDING PESTICIDE REGULATIONS

HON. CHARLIE ROSE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, today, I have introduced legislation that will attempt to address inadequacies in current law that have undermined consumer confidence in pesticide regulations. The proposal that we have put forward does not represent any special interests and is an attempt to balance the often-conflicting concerns of pesticide production, food production, and consumer protection. It is a thoughtful adaptation of the seven-point food safety plan put forward by the administration during the last Congress. The bill can generally be characterized as a middle-ground approach to other food safety bills introduced this year. I agree that this proposal is not perfect, but I do believe it is the best point from which to begin debate.

Last week, the House Agriculture Subcommittee on Department Operations, Research and Foreign Agriculture conducted a hearing to review the Environmental Protection Agency's implementation of its adverse effects data program and the FIFRA reregistration program. Basically, the story revealed in the hearing read like a government bureaucrat's worst nightmare. This story followed in the tradition of a hearing we held three weeks ago on the Department of Agriculture's horrible mismanagement of the National Food Consumption Survey. In both instances, the hearings revealed that important data had been lost, misplaced, improperly submitted, improperly collected, and improperly managed. And we also have two instances of inadequate and poorly utilized databases—databases designed to ensure the safety of America's food supply.

The lead agencies on ensuring a safe food supply have not done a particularly good job of winning public confidence. And responsible regulation and public confidence are absolutely essential to avoid another damaging scare like we faced with Alar. As chairman of the House Agriculture Subcommittee on Department Operations, Research and Foreign Agriculture, it has become increasingly evident to me that diligent congressional oversight will be essential to ensure that Government administration of pertinent laws lives up to congressional and public expectations. Oversight is required; so oversight will be done.

Subcommittee hearings on this proposal are schedule to begin November 19. It is my sincere hope that all interested parties will participate in constructive dialog on the issues surrounding food safety. We have all heard the hollow food safety rhetoric many times before; it's time to move beyond this approach and to forge a responsible reform of the existing food safety laws.

EXPLANATION OF ABSENCE DURING CONSIDERATION OF BANKING REFORM BILL

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, late last week I was unable to be here during initial consideration of the Deposit Insurance and Regulatory Reform Act (H.R. 6). I had the privilege of being the only Member of the Congress to attend the second Ceres Conference where I was able to spend 2 full days in substantive consultation with some of the world's most distinguished science and technology practitioners and policymakers. As chairman of the House Science, Space, and Technology Committee, I felt I had a particular obligation to participate in the annual conference proceedings.

Radical political changes, rapid technological advances, and inexorable demographic shifts force us to reexamine the development and management of the global food system. This system, which represents almost half of the world's economy, is at the center of great debates in health, in food safety and regulation, and in trade.

In the first Ceres Conference, we examined the future problems of food and nutrition in the broadest way possible. Throughout those discussions, certain key issues emerged that cried out for fuller examination at a second Ceres Conference:

First, the science and technology that emanate from molecular biology and genetic engineering are moving faster than the public policy decisions needed to take full and safe advantage of their possibilities for economic and health benefits. Consumer interest is focussed mainly on possible risk, but as Aaron Wildavsky has pointed out, the demand for zero risk is not only impossible to satisfy but also results in lost opportunity benefits. But can we have policy dictated only by an educated elite? In present day democracies such a basis for policy is easily subverted by popular ignorance or narrow parochial interests. Accordingly, a major question is the adequacy of our present institutions to provide a suitable forum out of which public trust might emerge when the science, per se, justifies such trust.

Second, there is a pressing need for a better scientific basis for food regulation. The political influence of regional interests threatens the emergency of rational global regulatory harmonization. Without such harmonization nontariff barriers will further inhibit free trade. We shall be less able to grow, manufacture, and distribute food in ways that allow the new technologies better to feed the world's population. Of course, other factors are important as well, for example, equitable technology transfer, patent protection for investment, and public policy that will take into account technological unemployment and other disruptions and dislocations to the lives of those affected by these changes.

These two key issues were explored in more detail in the second Ceres Conference:

In the first panel, Prof. Ray Goldberg of the Harvard Business School and a distinguished panelist explored how revolutionary new technologies will affect the structure and use of the global food system, and products coming from it. The panelists addressed themselves to how change will occur and what its likely outcomes will be.

Dr. Carolina Jackson, the member of the European Parliament shepherding new food regulatory legislation through the European Parliament, led a panel examining issues of the food regulatory process, exploring how it is influenced by both science and politics. While science is a universal language, scientific capability and resources vary from region to region, as does politics. Yet if we are to encourage free trade in a global food system, this nontariff barrier to trade must somehow be harmonized and socioeconomic hurdles confronted.

In the third panel, Prof. Dorothy Nelkin of New York University, led a discussion of the interaction of science and politics, using the topic of diet and cancer as a case study. The public is overwhelmed by messages about its diet, either of alarm or of unbridled optimism. Cancer is the subject of considerable attention in this regard. Some nutrients in our diet are now viewed as cancer preventives; on the other hand, naturally occurring substances, as well as those added to the food system by man, are said to be potential carcinogens. The panel discussed how rational public policy can be developed when scientific information is incomplete and uncertain.

After a discussion of this problem in nutrition, the fourth panel explored the question of public understanding of new food technologies. Harvard Law School Prof. Charles Nesson, employing the Socratic method he uses on the Public Broadcasting System's public policy series, discussed the issues raised by the inexorable advances in these technologies. How can we weigh the cost of opportunity against the cost of risk when public fear is now our greatest impediment to technological progress? If the public does not buy technologically produced products, then investment in such development will stop. But can a determination of the safety of such products really be made on a purely scientific basis? Is the traditional notion of the entirely objective, disinterested scientist a reality or a fiction? Is no risk a reasonable or even a possible policy objective? If a determination of minimal risk versus maximal benefit can be made, how and to what extent can the consumer understand the issues? If the issues are difficult to understand, who should inform them, and how should they be informed? Professor Nesson was joined by a panel of distinguished leaders in various sectors involved in such decisions.

Finally, a panel of industry leaders, chaired by John T. Dunlop, university professor emeritus at Harvard University, led a discussion of action alternatives. In light of what we have learned about the distance between the art of the technologically possible and what the public psyche is willing to accept, what if anything can the individual food company do to inform the consumer? How can it act both effectively and responsibly? Do we need a specialized, industrywide working group or a more broadly based organization to which the perplexed public can turn for a better understanding of nutrition, food safety and related policy issues? If there is no appropriate organization already in place whose mission covers these needs should one be created and what form should it take? What are the consequences of inaction to the business health of our companies and to the general health of the public?

In summary, if we are properly to feed and nourish the people of the world, then new trading opportunities must be achieved. The removal of nontariff trade barriers, in turn, will lead to new economic growth. Such growth and its consequent new wealth will create a new consumer demand for improved nutrition and better health. With these demands will come greater opportunities for the entire food system—from the producer of seeds to the processor and retailer of foods. These are some of the new challenges—but how do we manage them?

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute to members of the American Legion's Post 18 in Portsmouth, RI. On this Veterans Day, we certainly owe these fine American citizens a special honor.

I will be joining many Rhode Islanders this coming Monday to recognize and pay tribute to the tremendous impact that American Legion's Post 18 and other veterans have on our everyday activities. We must always remind our citizenry that veterans are not simply a part of our Nation's past. They are not simply soldiers who fought in a war to keep our national borders intact. Instead, we must always—not just on Veterans Day—remember that the bravery and self-sacrifice of these honorable citizens of Newport and other communities affects the present day lives of not only Americans, but free people throughout the world.

For example, just this past Tuesday, cities and towns in Rhode Island and across the Nation held elections for mayor and local offices. Our right to choose our leaders democratically, as we recently did in Rhode Island, would not exist were it not for the fact that hundreds of thousands of brave Americans—such as the fine members of post 18—were willing to make the ultimate sacrifice to defend our democratic form of Government, embodied by our cherished right to vote.

Who would have thought several years ago that we would today be witnessing the liberation of Eastern Europe and the collapse of communism in the Soviet Union. In a short time, the world has gone from an environment marked by mistrust and nuclear threat to one of hope for long-term peace and freedom from tyranny. These miraculous events did not happen by accident. Rather, they are a direct result of the diligence and fortitude of the forces of democracy, of which our veterans have played such a key role.

Those who have died for this Nation can only fail to the extent that we fail them. They gave their all, and we must do nothing less than grant them the benefits and care they so clearly deserve. If we fail them, we let down far more than our veterans: We fail our country, we desecrate our heritage, and we belittle the rights and freedoms that they fought to preserve.

On this Monday, I pledge to redouble my efforts in Congress to strongly support veterans medical and other programs. My record clearly recognizes how deeply indebted we are to the sacrifice made by veterans such as those of American Legion Post 18.

We can all remember the near tragedy which took place late last year when Congress did not pass legislation granting veterans a 1991 COLA. I was pleased to join the effort early this year to pass this belated but much-needed veterans COLA bill.

I was also pleased to play a part in the effort early this year to pass the most comprehensive legislation granting additional benefits to veterans exposed to the deadly herbicide agent orange. The scientific evidence is indisputable linking agent orange exposure to certain illnesses, and Congress did well to pass this much needed legislation.

Finally, it is fitting that just last week, Congress sent to the President legislation granting veterans a 3.7 percent COLA for 1992. I look forward to the President's quick signature to this bill so that our veterans receive the compensation they so clearly deserve.

The members of American Legion Post 18 deserve our deepest gratitude and respect on this Veterans Day. I urge every Rhode Islander, if they get a chance to see a member of post 18, think about their irreplacable contribution and take the time to say, "thanks for keeping us free."

RECOGNITION OF THE FOURTH ANNUAL AMERICAN FLAG RUN

HON. JACK REED

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of the fourth annual "American Flag Run" sponsored by our colleague, GLENN BROWDER of Alabama. This event honors veterans and U.S. Armed Forces around the country.

The American Flag Run began October 27 at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and traveled through five States to the National Cemetery in Fort Mitchell, AL. During the run, the American flag is carried by veterans and nonveterans, both young and old, to honor the men and women who have proudly served this country.

As a veteran, I am proud to support this great event. Each year, in early November, Americans express their appreciation for the sacrifices of the men and women who defend our great country. The American flag run continues this important tradition of honoring our veterans.

I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing this unique tribute to our veterans.

SALUTE TO TOMMY LASORDA

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, as a longtime fan of the Los Angeles Dodgers, I am pleased to rise today to honor the dean of major league managers, Tommy Lasorda.

Although the Dodgers were just edged at the wire this year, Tommy has established himself as one of the best skippers in baseball. During his 14 years as the Dodgers' manager, he has guided his team to two world championships, four National League pennants and six Western Division titles. His teams have also finished in second place three times and in third place once.

As many of my colleagues know, Tommy has bled "Dodger Blue" for 42 of his 64 years, as a player in the organization for 11 years, a scout for 4 years, a minor league manager for 8 years and a Dodger coach for 4 more before being named to replace Walter Alston in 1977.

That year, he became only the 19th manager in Major League history to win a league title in his first year of managing, earning "Manager of the Year Awards" in the process. He also won the league championship in 1978, to become the only N.L. skipper to win pennants his first 2 years.

Tommy led his 1981 team to the world championship over the New York Yankees, and was the leader of the underdog 1988 team that shocked the Oakland A's.

But Tommy is more than an outstanding manager. More importantly, he is an outstanding human being, giving selflessly of his time to aid countless charities.

Mr. Speaker, Tommy Lasorda will be honored for his many contributions on November 17, by Club da Vinci at the group's 17th anniversary dinner dance. I ask my colleagues—even those from the bay area—to join me in saluting him for his work both and on and off the field.

A TRIBUTE TO BOB FORSYTHE

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention the fine work and outstanding public service of Bob Forsythe. Bob is retiring later this month after 26 years of dedicated service to the city of Redlands and will be honored at a special dinner on December 1.

Bob began his work with the city in 1965 when he was hired by the Redlands City Fire Department. He was promoted to engineer in 1970, captain in 1976, and division chief in 1985. Over the years, he has served the city with honor and distinction responding to all major incidents and providing support in many roles.

Bob is certified in many areas, far too many to mention, including rescue tactics, fire prevention, high rise fire tactics, helicopter operations, and heavy rescue. Bob's current assignment is division chief where he is in charge of training, hazardous materials incidents, and paramedic operations for the city of Redlands.

In addition to his professional activities, Bob has also been married to his lovely wife, Mary, for 35 years and has five children—Michael, Susan, Patrick, Tim, and Robert Jr.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me and our colleagues in paying tribute to the very fine work that Bob has performed over the years. His selfless public service and longstanding dedication to the people of Redlands clearly qualifies Bob for recognition by the House today.

REV. ANDREW ANDERSON, NEW RECTOR AT ST. MARY'S CATHEDRAL

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Rev. Andrew Anderson, who recently was featured in the Miami Herald as the new rector for St. Mary's Cathedral in Miami. The article "New Rector Assumes Post at St. Mary's Cathedral" by Nancy San Martin tells his story:

> When the Rev. Andrew Anderson was studying to become a teacher 17 years ago, he got the feeling he should be teaching a specific subject: Catholicism.
>
> So Anderson enrolled in the seminary to become a priest.
>
> "That's what the Lord wanted me to do," said Anderson, 48. "You have a desire to pray, to feel closer to God and to want to bring people closer to God."
>
> Anderson is the new rector at St. Mary's Cathedral, 7525 NE Second Ave. He replaces the Rev. Gerard LaCerra, who served as rector at St. Mary's for 11 years.
>
> LaCerra retained his position as chancellor and vicar general for the archdiocese, which means he coordinates projects for the pastoral center and fills in for the archbishop when necessary.
>
> As rector, Anderson is responsible for the cathedral's daily administrative duties, reporting to the pastor, Archbishop Edward McCarthy. The cathedral is the mother church of the archdiocese and is where major events and ordinations take place.
>
> "Father Anderson is going to be just fine," LaCerra said. "He is sensitive to people's needs."

Anderson was ordained a priest by the Archdiocese of Nashville in 1974. He received a doctorate degree in canon law—law of the church—in 1986.

A native of Michigan, Anderson first came to Miami in 1981 when he served as judicial vicar for the Archdiocese of Miami's tribunal. As judicial vicar, he decided whether to grant annulments. From 1989 to 1990, he was the pastor at St. Maximilian Kolbe Church in Pembroke Pines.

A year later, he went to the Vatican to work with the Congregation for Sacraments and Worship. He recently returned to Miami and was appointed to St. Mary's.

"I love it here," Anderson said. "The people are so loving and welcoming: It's nice to see their deep faith and how they treasure their families."

The parish's 1,500 members are ethnically mixed with Haitians, African Americans, Hispanics and Non-Hispanic whites.

"I was very gratified to see that where there is diversity, there is a true community," Anderson said. "It is a constant reminder of our universality."

Anderson who speaks Spanish, Italian and is now picking up Creole, said he will spend his first year building on the sense of community that already exists at St. Mary's.

Sister Jane Stoecker, principal of the adjacent school, said Anderson is a welcome addition.

I am happy to pay tribute to Reverend Anderson by reprinting this article. I wish him much success in his new position as rector for the mother church of the Archdiocese of Miami.

MILITARY ROLE OF CONGRESS

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to my colleagues' attention the following article that appeared in the November 1 edition of the Washington Times regarding the 1986 Defense Department Reorganization Act. Sponsored by Senator Barry Goldwater and Representative BILL NICHOLS, the act reformed the U.S. military command and control procedures. By centralizing the command of all forces in the theater of operations and focusing on strategy rather than management skills, these revisions became a key component of the victory in the Persian Gulf.

A major force behind the reforms was my distinguished colleague, Representative IKE SKELTON. By working with the military while serving as chairman of the House Armed Services Committee's Panel on Military Education, Representative SKELTON was able to revitalize and restructure the education system for mid- and senior-level officers through such efforts as the establishment of the Army's School for Military Studies in 1983. I commend Representative SKELTON for his continued efforts to make the U.S. armed services the effective force it is today:

MILITARY ROLE OF CONGRESS

(By Harry Summers)

Earlier this month, following a lecture to the Marine Command and Staff College at Quantico, Va., the conversation among the listeners turned to the depths into which some members of Congress had recently fallen. "What a tragedy to see them all tarred with the same brush," said one Marine. "The reforms they made in our command procedures and in military education helped make victory in the Gulf possible."

Although it is not generally recognized, Congress has always played a major role in military matters. "By whose authority do you act?" asked the British commander of Fort Ticonderoga in bewildered amazement as the Americans demanded his surrender in the opening days of the American Revolution. "In the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress!" was American Gen. Ethan Allen's reply.

Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, the American commander in the Gulf war, could have given Saddam Hussein the same answer. As the Constitution makes clear, the Congress—and the Congress alone—has the sole power to "raise and support armies," "provide and maintain a navy" and "provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia [today's National Guard and Reserves]."

Not only did our latter-day "Continental" Congress formally authorize the use of force in the Gulf on Jan. 12, 1991, but the entire American presence—fighting personnel, arms, ammunition, equipment and Gen. Schwarzkopf himself—was there at the sufferance of the U.S. Congress.

Led by Sen. Sam Nunn, Georgia Democrat, and Rep. Les Aspin, Wisconsin Democrat, and their respective Armed Services committees, the Congress not only provided the enabling legislation for recruitment of the high-quality active and reserve force that proved so impressive in the Gulf, but also approved and funded the acquisition of its high-tech arms and equipment.

And Congress' influence was not limited to material factors alone. The Constitution also provided that the Congress "shall have power . . . to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." Sponsored by then Sen. Barry Goldwater, Arizona Republican, in the Senate and Rep. Bill Nichols, Alabama Democrat, in the House in 1986, the Goldwater-Nichols Defense Department Reorganization Act made major reforms in the military's top-level command and control procedures.

Thus when war came in the Persian Gulf, the command arrangements were much more akin to the war-winning World War II chain of command than they were to those of the Vietnam debacle where the war was run from Honolulu, 6,000 miles away. Congress has brought the military back to its senses. As with Gen. Dwight Eisenhower and the World War II European Theater of Operations, Gen. Schwarzkopf had total command of all U.S. forces in the Kuwaiti Theater of Operations.

Largely unseen in the success of this transformation was the fact that even before the Gulf war, the Congress had set out to ensure that this joint—i.e., all-service—approach to warfare was institutionalized through reforms to the military's mid- and senior-level educational system.

The eminence grise behind this reform movement was Rep. Ike Skelton, Missouri Democrat. Quiet and unassuming, he was one of the original proponents of the Goldwater-Nichols reforms. And he saw early that the military's education system was emphasizing management skills at the expense of strategy.

As chairman of the House Armed Service Committee's Panel on Military Education in 1988, Mr. Skelton found that "we aren't producing the kind of strategic thinkers of the kind that won World War II." The timing of that study was fortuitous, for similar sentiments had been rising for some time within the military itself.

Mr. Skelton's efforts helped bring them to a head. The military's staff and war colleges were encouraged to emphasize strategic thinking and ensure a joint approach to warfighting. The Army's School for Advanced Military Studies (SAMS), established in 1983, is a case in point. Four of its students were dispatched to the Gulf to aid in developing the concept of operations for the war.

Mr. Skelton helped build the intellectual framework that made victory in the Gulf possible. And he did more than that. His own son, Lt. Jim Skelton of the Army's 1st Cavalry Division, took part in the fight. Lt. Skelton's bravery was recognized by award of the Bronze Star Medal with "V" device, the nation's fourth-highest combat decoration.

While Mr. Skelton received no medal, his effort in reforming the military made sure that one of the major failings of the Vietnam War was not repeated. This time tactical successes were translated into strategic victory.

VETERANS DAY

HON. HELEN DELICH BENTLEY

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, distinguished colleagues, I would like to take this time to remember and honor November 11 as Veterans Day. The day had been commissioned in 1919, by President Woodrow Wilson, and was known then as Armistice Day, the day Germany surrendered and Americans were victorious in World War I.

In Maryland, the first Armistice Day was declared by Governor Harrington, almost spontaneously, as crowds poured onto the streets to celebrate the end of WWI. All business had ceased, as Marylanders enjoyed the end of battle and knew our brave soldiers soon would return. The Baltimore Sun called it the "Greatest Day in the History of the World," a fitting title to end such a bitter World War.

The celebration would not last long. As President Calvin Coolidge had the foresight to say at Johns Hopkins University in 1922, "Freedom is not only bought with a great price; it is maintained by unremitting effort."

We again would be forced to defend freedom and democracy. Over the year, our bravest would be called upon to fight for the values instilled in Americans; the values that keep our country free and our flag flying proudly. In honor of all Veterans of all wars, Armistice Day would be renamed after the men and women who see the United States as the best hope for freedom. In 1954, following President Eisenhower's decree, Governor McKeldin recommended the Maryland General Assembly adopt the name, Veterans Day.

On Veterans Day, 1991, we are reminded that this is the first holiday after the gulf war. We have new veterans. Our soldiers are our young, old, mothers, fathers, neighbors, and friends. Our families were at war and we made it very clear we were there supporting them.

With all due respect Mr. Speaker, nowhere more than in Maryland did one see more patriotism and pride for their country. Nowhere more than in Maryland did we commit ourselves to our soldiers and our flag.

As we pay homage to all veterans, from WWI to the gulf, we will be proud of our brave soldiers and thank them for enabling our flag to continue to fly. And this year, as we enjoy our parades and festivities, let us remember that each flag we see is a memorial to the brave veterans who gave their lives for the freedom we enjoy today.

PACK LEADS FIGHT AGAINST NEIGHBORHOOD BLIGHT

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Father Jose Menendez, who recently was featured in the Miami Herald, for leading the People Acting for Community Together [PACT] to clean up his Miami neighborhood. The article "Activists Urge Crackdown on Blight" by Joseph Tanfani tells how PACT has successfully driven out crack houses, and now is leading a drive to combat neighborhood blight:

> Father Jose Menendez says heaven can wait. Right now he's leading his parishioners on a fight to clean up their piece of Miami.
> Menendez is president of People Acting for Community Together (PACT), a group of 14 churches in Miami, North Miami and Hialeah. Churches in PACT successfully pressured the city to clean up crack houses. Now they're dealing with dirt.
>
> Menendez says PACT's Clean Up Miami Dade effort is now focusing its efforts on cleaning up areas around Corpus Christi Church, 3220 NW Seventh Ave., and St. Mary's Cathedral, 7525 NW Second Ave. "But many of the things we're fighting for affect the whole city," he said.
>
> Most recently, Menendez and other PACT members have been badgering City Hall to combat neighborhood nuisances: trash in streets, vacant lots filled with tires and other junk, abandoned cars rusting in front of houses. They said they've received lots of promises, little action.
>
> "Our people have less capacity to wait," Menendez said. "They need to see things going on fast. Otherwise, their hope will fall apart."
>
> PACT and city manager Cesar Odio met last week at Menendez' Corpus Christi Church. Menendez says he is mostly satisfied with the results.
>
> Carlos Smith, assistant city manager and the city's liaison with PACT, said Miami government is doing as much as it can to help.
>
> "They cannot expect us to have inspectors in every block 24 hours a day," Smith said. "We need their support."
>
> He has asked the city's scofflaw task force to make monthly sweeps of the areas to try to clear out abandoned cars, but some problems are sticky. Smith said state laws make it tough for cities to clear out junk cars and junk tires quickly. He said he will press for changes.
>
> Smith said an upcoming overhaul of code enforcement should help inspectors crack down on recalcitrant owners of trashy vacant lots.
>
> PACT also wants mini-trash transfer stations close by, figuring they will help stop illegal dumping. But Smith said that won't happen before next year, when Miami is due to overhaul its trash system.
>
> PACT, which runs an office with three staff members, will not accept public funds for its efforts, which Menendez sees as the Lord's work.
> "I think we need to fight," Menendez said. "We do not have to wait until the Lord comes. We are putting our blood and sweat and tears into this part of the world."

I am happy to pay tribute to Father Jose Menendez and his organization PACT by reprinting this article. I wish to commend him and his organization for their concern for their community. They are setting a good example for civic activism which all neighborhoods should follow.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MARCO CANGIALOSI

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great respect and admiration that I address my colleagues in the House today, for I rise to extend my heartiest congratulations and warmest best wishes to Cav. Marco Cangialosi, who is the recipient of the "Humanitarian Award" from Panorama Italo-USA.

Marco was born in Marineo, Pr., Palermo, Italy in 1933. He moved to the United States in 1957 and immediately began working for a window manufacturing company. Five years later, after much hard work and many long hours, Marco and his two brothers opened a business of their own. Dor-Win Manufacturing became successful thanks to the commitment and dedication of these brothers.

Marco is deeply involved in his community. He contributes his time, effort, and money to various community projects. Marco is a founder of Columbus Park in Lodi, NJ, and has received many awards and honors for his tireless service, including being named "Man of the Year" by the Kiwanis Club in 1980 and again by the Italian American Forum of Lodi in 1982. In 1984 Marco received the Humanitarian Award from the Italian Tribune and was honored at the Columbus Day Parade in Newark, NJ. Marco was voted one of the top 10 Italian American citizens by the readers of Il Progresso Newspaper for which he received a silver medal from the Italian Ambassador to the United States in 1986.

Marco's greatest commitment to his adopted country came with the nationwide effort to restore the Statue of Liberty. Marco was determined to take advantage of this unique opportunity and contribute something to a country which had given him so much. Marco could take special pride during the unveiling of the restored Statue of Liberty on July 4, 1986, because the windows on Ellis Island and the Statue of Liberty were donated by Marco and his company.

I am honored to call Marco Cangialosi a close friend. He is truly one of the special few who make a difference in society. Marco is a man of the utmost integrity who sincerely cares about his neighbors, his community, and his country.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join in paying tribute to this exceptional man and extend my best wishes to him.

TRIBUTE TO THE ST. TERESA SCHOOL

HON. JACK REED

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the St. Teresa School of Providence, RI, on the occasion of its 100th anniversary celebration. Although tragically, the school burned down last November, the students were able to complete the 100th school season before the official close of the building this past June.

Under the direction of the Sisters of Notre Dame, St. Teresa's enrolled approximately 200 children every school year in grades kindergarten through eight. For the last 20 years, Sr. Pauline Elizabeth served as the Principal. She and the entire faculty and staff at St. Teresa's dedicated themselves to providing for the scholastic preparation and the religious education of the students, many of whom were from the inner-city areas of Providence. The school not only has been a source of both academic and spiritual strength for the entire community.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in saluting the St. Teresa School for its commitment to education and for the century of service they provided as they prepared our students for good citizenship. The school's perseverance to complete their 100th year through an obstacle of fate is indeed an inspiration.

YOUTH CRIME WATCH KEEPS UP THE FIGHT

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, the Youth Crime Watch of America is making an impact on crime in our schools and among young people. The nationwide, nonprofit organization began in 1986 as an expansion of the successful Dade County Youth Crime Watch Program. This student-led crime and drug prevention program has yielded such favorable results that it has been mandated in all Dade County schools and receives State level financial support. President George Bush recognized the volunteers of Youth Crime Watch of Dade County as his 553d Daily Point of Light for the Nation.

The youth Crime Watch Program in Florida has gained the respect of the Department of Education, the Florida Governor and State legislature. The program works with students of all ages, from elementary school through 12th grade, conducting workshops and providing educational materials. The program forms a network of students in elementary and secondary schools who are committed to helping create and maintain crime and drug free schools. The Youth Crime Watch agenda is to spread positive, community building values and encourage positive civic action, and has done so with remarkable effectiveness.

The Youth Crime Watch Program works. In some schools, crime has been reduced by 50 percent after the program was implemented. It inspires student confidence with the knowledge that one's school is committed to stopping crime. With new funding from the Florida State Legislature, the Youth Crime Watch Program anticipates additional growth and greater effectiveness. The program has added two full time training coordinators to travel throughout the State, advising established programs and aiding the implementation of new ones. The coordinators assist in bringing students, educators and law enforcement representatives from counties with programs in operation to those which are in the development stages.

I commend the leadership of Youth Crime Watch of America president, Ms. Betty Ann Good and executive director, Ms. Ann W. Lisk, and board members, Louis Wolfson III, Roger Fritze, Maj. Doug Hughes, Marilyn Morris, Joyce Nunez Bell, Jane McMillan, Linda D. Brown, Sgt. James DiBernardo, William Flanagan, James Kelly, E.O. McAllister, Jeff Miller, Kip Parsons, Howard Rasmussen, Donna Uzzell, and Harry Wright for making the program a success. I also want to recognize the newly established State coordinators, Mr. Larry Bursey representing the southern counties of Florida and Ms. Susan Nefzger representing the northern counties. I encourage all of those involved in Youth Crime Watch, students, educators, civic leaders and law enforcement representatives to keep up the good work.

COMMENDING UNION RESCUE MISSION FOR 100 YEARS OF SERVICE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, a majority of my California colleagues and I are taking this special opportunity to commend Union Rescue Mission, located in the skid row area of Los Angeles, for its service to the homeless, hungry, and needy as it celebrates its 100th anniversary this year. Union Rescue Mission is the largest mission of its kind in the world. Since its founding in 1891, the mission has served over 46 million meals to the hungry. Over 86 million nights of shelter have been provided to the homeless.

Today, with an annual budget of close to $8 million and a staff of nearly 100, the mission serves the poor and needy of skid row by helping to restore hurting lives and broken families and by renewing faith in those who have lost all hope. The Union Rescue Mission offers these services by depending solely upon the contributions and support of concerned individuals, churches, and other organizations—with no Government support.

As it marks its first 100 years of service, a campaign is underway to build a new and larger home for the mission; $15 million have been raised for this project. This evening, at a gala event in Los Angeles, the check for $15 million will be presented to the officers of the mission. I am proud to announce that many of my California colleagues and I have signed a resolution which will also be presented to the mission at this evening's gala. We are pleased to formally commend Union Rescue Mission for its century of commitment to the thousands of needy who have received charity and hope as a result of its services in our State. I commend the following resolution to each of my colleagues in the House of Representatives:

Whereas, in 1891 Lyman Steward, President and founder of Union Oil Company—recognizing the need to serve the poor and homeless of the Los Angeles area—founded the Union Rescue Mission (initially known as the Pacific Gospel Union); and

Whereas, the Union Rescue Mission serves more than 1.1 million meals each year, provides nightly shelter to more than 1,100 people, has distributed more than a half million articles of clothing, and has helped more than 1,500 individuals successfully overcome drug and/or alcohol abuse; and

Whereas, the Mission operates without the support of the federal government, depending solely on private contributions and the support of concerned individuals, churches and other organizations; and

Whereas, the Mission has had an overwhelming impact on the homeless and hungry in the Los Angeles Skid Row area, restoring more than 40,000 lives, and is committed to serving the less fortunate 365 days a year; and

Whereas, the Mission not only exemplifies the 1,000-points-of-light volunteerism promoted by the Administration, but is in fact a century-old beacon of help known and appreciated nation-wide;

Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved That the California Congressional Delegation commends the Union Rescue Mission for its dedication to serving the needy, and calls upon the United States Congress to similarly honor the Mission's century of commitment to the poor and the homeless.

VETERANS DAY

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute to veterans residing at the Rhode Island Veterans Home in Bristol, RI. On this Veterans Day, we certainly owe these fine American citizens a special honor.

I will be joining many Rhode Islanders this coming Monday to recognize and pay tribute to the tremendous impact that Rhode Island Veterans Home Residents and other veterans have on our everyday activities. We must always remind our citizenry that veterans are not simply a part of our Nation's past. They are not simply soldiers who fought in a war to keep our national borders intact. Instead, we must always—not just on Veterans Day—remember that the bravery and self-sacrifice of these honorable citizens of Newport and other communities affects the present day lives of not only Americans, but free people throughout the world.

For example, just this past Tuesday, cities and towns in Rhode Island and across the Nation held elections for mayor and local offices. Our right to choose our leaders democratically, as we recently did in Rhode Island, would not exist were it not for the fact that hundreds of brave Americans—such as the fine veterans of the Bristol home—were willing to make the ultimate sacrifice to defend our democratic form of Government, embodied by our cherished right to vote.

Who would have thought several years ago that we would today be witnessing the liberation of Eastern Europe and the collapse of communism in the Soviet Union. In a short time, the world has gone from an environment marked by mistrust and nuclear threat to one of hope for long-term peace and freedom from tyranny. These miraculous events did not happen by accident. Rather, they are a direct result of the diligence and fortitude of the forces of democracy, of which our veterans have played such a key role.

Those who have died for this Nation can only fail to the extent that we fail them. They gave their all, and we must do nothing less than grant them the benefits and care they so clearly deserve. If we fail them, we let down far more than our veterans: We fail our country, we desecrate our heritage, and we belittle the rights and freedoms that they fought to preserve.

On this Monday, I pledge to redouble my efforts in Congress to strongly support veterans' medical and other programs. My record clearly recognizes how deeply indebted we are to the sacrifice made by veterans such as those in Bristol.

We can all remember the near tragedy which took place late last year when Congress did not pass legislation granting veterans a 1991 COLA. I was pleased to join the effort early this year to pass this belated, but much-needed, veterans COLA bill.

I was also pleased to play a part in the effort early this year to pass the most comprehensive legislation granting additional benefits to veterans exposed to the deadly herbicide agent orange. The scientific evidence is indisputable linking agent orange exposure to certain illnesses, and Congress did well to pass this much-needed legislation.

Finally, it is fitting that just last week, Congress sent to the President legislation granting veterans a 3.7 percent COLA for 1992. I look forward to the President's quick signature to this bill so that our veterans receive the compensation they so clearly deserve.

Residents at the Rhode Island Veterans Home in Bristol deserve our deepest gratitude and respect on this Veterans Day. I urge every Rhode Islander, if they get a chance to see a Bristol veteran, think about their irreplacable contribution and take the time to say, "Thanks for keeping us free."

W.L. PHILBRICK, ONE OF MIAMI'S TRUE PIONEERS

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize retired funeral director and former Coral Gables commissioner, W.L. Philbrick who was featured in the Miami Herald on his 91st birthday. The article "Retired Funeral Director Honored on 91st Birthday" by Ana Acle tells about Mr. Philbrick's many contributions to the development of the Miami area:

W.L. Philbrick was only 8 when he attended his older brother's funeral.

Upset at the loss of his big brother, who died in a train wreck, Philbrick was even more disappointed when the funeral home did not do a very good job of embalming his kin.

"I knew then that I wanted to be a funeral director," he said.

Friday, the retired funeral director and former Coral Gables commissioner celebrated his 91st birthday and his 60th wedding anniversary with his wife, Christine, and about 30 other friends at the David William Hotel in Coral Gables.

Wyndham Llewellyn Philbrick, known as Phil, was born Oct. 5, 1900, and was married on the same day in 1931. But the wedding day was not chosen to help him remember both events; Philbrick is a stickler for accuracy, including dates.

"I was born in Tallahassee and raised in Jacksonville from 1906 to 1919," he said. "I came to Dade County on Sept. 28, 1919. I was here for the hurricane of 1926 and, in 1922, I operated a business under my own name."

Philbrick founded Miami-Dade Community College's Mortuary Science Department and was one of Miami's pioneer funeral directors.

"He was the first to provide an ambulance hearse when Miami mostly consisted of waterways and bridges," said Darwin Gearhart, chairman of the Department of Funeral Service at Miami-Dade. "He had the first handicap ramp, the first essential dial-a-prayer and the first air-conditioned funeral home in the South."

Gearhart has known Philbrick for 25 years and remembers when they met: "He introduced himself, then he entertained me for one hour about the funeral of Al Capone, whom he embalmed."

At times, Philbrick entertained himself at the Gables' expense.

He once brought in a trash can and dumped garbage in front of Coral Gables commissioners to protest a garbage hike. He also was escorted out of commission chambers by two policemen after refusing to stop speaking. He even rode his bicycle up and down City Hall corridors to lobby for a bike path.

At his party Friday, Philbrick gave the Miami-Dade Wolfson Foundation a check for $50,000. Horace Traylor, vice president of the MDCC Foundation, and J. Terrence Kelly, president of Miami-Dade's North campus, presented Philbrick with an honorary associate arts degree.

I am happy to pay tribute to W.L. Philbrick by reprinting this article from the Miami Herald. Mr. Philbrick is truly one of Miami's great pioneers who has played a significant role in making Miami the great metropolitan area it is today.

MULTIFUNCTIONAL ELECTRONIC DISPLAY SYSTEM PROGRAM

HON. JOHN J. RHODES III

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, when the House Committee on Science, Space, and Technology finished consideration earlier this year of H.R. 1988, the NASA Multiyear Authorization Act of 1991, the Committee had deferred development of the Multifunctional Electronic Display System [MEDS], decreasing the Assured Shuttle Availability [ASA] Program by $10 million.

However, as a member of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology and the Subcommittee on Space, I am very pleased today to note that the committee has not inserted language into its conference report noting that the ASA savings of $10 million is without prejudice and no longer intended to be specifically or solely targeted against the MEDS Program.

Mr. Speaker, members of the Committee have decided that the MEDS Program is an important and vital part of ASA. MEDS is a solution to the increasing number of failures associated with the existing electromechanical flight instruments. MEDS will incorporate state-of-the-art technology and will benefit NASA by increasing shuttle reliability and flight safety, reducing up-front costs by building on already developed technology and reducing operating costs through reduced maintenance.

NASA should have the discretion, under the ASA program, to address shuttle reliability and safety requirements and decide how best to assure shuttle availability. I am sure that given the opportunity to choose, among several projects, how best to do so will greatly assist the Nation's goal of increasing the safety and reliability of the Space Shuttle Program.

CONGRATULATIONS FIFTH DISTRICT ATHLETES

HON. MIKE KOPETSKI

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. KOPETSKI. Mr. Speaker, each fall as school begins again, millions of Americans participate in fall athletic activities. This is true all across our country, from Salem, MA to Salem, OR in my district. These activities add to the academic atmosphere and the sense of community that we all take pride in.

Today, I rise to congratulate all Fifth District residents who participated in and supported fall athletic activities. These include the individual athletes, their families, the coaches, the school administrators and teachers, the cheerleaders, the bands, the booster clubs, the officials, and the community supporters.

Mr. Speaker, this week in Oregon the playoffs begin for fall athletics. I would like to congratulate and wish good luck to those teams from my district who qualified for the playoffs. In women's volleyball; Clackamas High School, South Albany High School, Corvallis High School, Lake Oswego High School, Estacada High School, Molalla High School, Silverton High School. In men's soccer; Lakeridge High School, Lake Oswego High School, Corvallis High School, and Gervais High School. In women's soccer; West Linn High School, Crescent Valley High School, Lake Oswego High School and Gladstone High School. In men's football; Oregon City High School, McNary High School, Milwaukie High School, North Salem High School, Lakeridge High School, Silverton High School, Salem Academy and St. Paul High School. I would also like to congratulate my alma mater, Pendleton High School, for qualifying for the football playoffs.

Mr. Speaker, in recognizing athletic excellence I do not want to overlook the importance of academic achievement. I challenge each student athlete in my district to duplicate and exceed their athletic achievements in the classroom. True excellence begins in the classroom.

THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA SALUTES FEDERAL JUDGE JAMES LAWRENCE KING

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Federal Judge James Lawrence King, who was featured in the Miami Herald after serving as the chief Federal judge for the Nation's busiest Federal court—the Southern District of Florida. The editorial, "Thank you, your honor" tells how Judge King tackled one of the Nation's most extensive and difficult judicial caseloads as chief judge:

For the last seven years, James Lawrence King has known the exalted status of being the chief judge of the busiest Federal court in the nation. But among the reasons that the Federal Bar Association and the Dade County Bar Association are honoring him with a dinner tonight is that Larry King's exalted status never went to his head. Instead, it went to his roots.

Judge King, who yielded the chief judgeship to Judge Norman Roettger earlier this month, chuckles in private that his career has taken him only about 35 blocks. That's the distance to the Federal Courthouse from his birthplace at 2229 NW 35th St.

He was born at home on Dec. 20, 1927. The house had neither electricity nor indoor plumbing. "I was in the sixth grade before we ever had anything more than a kerosene lamp to read by," he recalls.

That lamp lit within him a great love for Miami and South Florida. And Larry King's own lights—pre-eminently as chief judge, but also eminently as a first-rate jurist as well—have been a beacon for a court beset by circumstances and stresses unique in the entire Federal-court system.

Consider some bare numbers alone: Nationally, Federal judges carry an average load of about 400 cases, civil and criminal. The 11 active judges in the Southern District of Florida, which covers all of South Florida, average 700 cases. Moreover, because geography makes South Florida a natural drug-importation point, this district's judges get an above-average load of complex, multiple-defendant criminal cases.

Some districts, with criminal caseloads not even approaching that of the South Florida district, have stopped taking civil cases altogether. Not this court. It has just moved up to fourth (from sixth) nationally in the number of civil cases disposed of. Average time: six months. "That," says Judge King, "is a miracle."

Whatever it is, it's attributable to Judge King's work ethic and his example: For seven years, he carried a full caseload even while devoting 25-30 hours a week to his administrative duties as chief judge.

Judge King could take senior status in December 1992, when he turns 65, and hear fewer cases. He says that he's not close to that decision yet. He's only close, at tonight's dinner, to a long and deserved ovation for exemplary public service.

I am happy to pay tribute to Judge King by reprinting this editorial. I wish him a continued long and successful career as a judge on the toughest judicial court in the Nation.

WESTLAKE VILLAGE CELEBRATES ITS 10TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute the city of Westlake Village as it celebrates its 10th anniversary.

Westlake Village's beginnings date back to 1963, when the American Hawaiian Steamship Co. purchased the old Albertson Ranch and proceeded to build a master-planned community. Westlake Village quickly became one of southern California's most prestigious communities, and a generation of residents have worked hard to keep it that way.

The cityhood movement got under way in May of 1979 when dedicated community leaders formed the cityhood community to establish local control and home rule. Westlake Village became a city in November 1981 after 81 percent of the voters decided to become Los Angeles County's 82d city. Since then, the residents and city officials have worked together to maintain high standards and values necessary to promote the highest quality of life. Indeed, Westlake Village residents pride themselves on living in one of the most beautiful cities in California.

The current members of the city council—Mayor Kenneth E. Rufener and council members Berniece E. Bennett, Bonnie Klove, James E. Emmons, and Douglas R. Yarrow, are to be commended for their hard work and leadership.

Mr. Speaker, on November 15, the city will host a gala 10th anniversary celebration. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting the residents and the leaders of Westlake Village as they mark this milestone, and in extending our best wishes for the years to come.

CONGRATULATIONS TO JACK ZISA

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great respect and admiration that I address my colleagues in the House today, for I rise to extend my heartiest congratulations and warmest best wishes to Mayor Jack Zisa who is the recipient of the Outstanding Public Official Award from Panorama Italo-USA.

For many in Hackensack, the name "Zisa" has come to be synonymous with a tradition of community service, dedication, and love of our city. Jack Zisa, elected mayor of our city in his first run for elective office, has only enhanced his family's tradition.

After graduating from Hackensack High School, Jack received his degree in accounting from Rutgers University. He is the owner of an insurance agency and a partner in an accounting firm here in Hackensack.

Long a contributing and vital member of our community, Jack is a member of the executive board of the Bergen County Private Industry Council; a trustee of the nonprofit Fairmount Creative Playground project; and an executive board member of the American Stage Theatre Group. He is also a member of the Hackensack Lions Club and has served as both a Cub Scout leader and little league baseball coach. Jack recently was honored by the Hackensack chapter of UNICO for his dedication and service to the community. As mayor, Jack has initiated many neighborhood programs including Clean Sweep Day, a day when citizens take part in a community cleanup in Hackensack, and the Community Volunteer Program which encourages volunteers to work at city hall and other city departments.

Jack and his wife, Maureen, have a son, John, in the Hackensack Public School System. He and his family are parishioners of Holy Trinity Roman Catholic Church.

He is truly one of the special few who make a difference in society. Jack is a man of the utmost integrity who sincerely cares about his neighbors, his community and his country.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join in paying tribute to Jack Zisa as a colleague and a friend, as he continues to provide invaluable service to his community and truly makes a difference in society. I extend my best wishes to him on this most special occasion.

JOY ALSCHULER, MIAMI BEACH KIWANIS CLUB'S FIRST WOMAN PRESIDENT

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Joy Alschuler, who was featured in the Miami Herald after being elected the first woman president of the Miami Beach Kiwanis Club. The article "Beach Kiwanis Club Names Woman Chief" by Charles B. Rabin tells about her plans for the 42-year-old Miami Beach Kiwanis Club:

For the first time since its inception 42 years ago, the Kiwanis Club in Miami Beach has named a woman president.

Kiwanis International, originally called the Supreme Lodge Benevolent Order of Brothers, didn't allow women until 1987. Founded in Detroit in 1915 by Allen S. Browne, the organization took its name from the Indian term "kiwanis," which translates to "self-expression."

Joy Alschuler, the Miami Beach club's new president, takes exception to the translation. "The club's goals are to help others." she said.

There are other chapters throughout the country that have women presidents.

"But, for Miami Beach, it's a breakthrough," said Alschuler. "It's a challenge, and I'm looking forward to the opportunity."

The Miami Beach chapter has 66 members.

Kiwanis clubs began admitting women after the Supreme Court ruled in 1987 that the Rotary Club must admit women.

"We were in a convention in Washington, D.C., at the time," said John B. Morton, president of Kiwanis International. "And the membership overwhelmingly approved female participants. It's been a very positive thing."

Founded with the intent of providing service to the community, the organization has grown to 87,000 clubs in 70 countries, with a total of 329,000 members. Alschuler said that last year, Kiwanis clubs raised $65 million, spending 22 million people hours doing volunteer community projects. The organization went international in 1962.

The clubs' theme this year is addressing the needs of children. They have provided car seats and emergency "Children's Resource Guides" to needy parents.

Alschuler also serves as treasurer of the Miami Beach Chamber of Commerce and vice chairman of the Miami Beach Planning Board. She is a past-president of the Miami Beach Taxpayers Association.

She is also vice president and manager of Jefferson National Bank's main office in Miami Beach. She's held that position since June 1990.

An English major who graduated cum laude from the University of Miami in 1975, Alschuler says studying English helped her in communications, a necessary ingredient for banking.

She also waited until the last of her children—she has two boys and a girl—were grown before attending school.

"Young women today are more apt to go into management training first, then have kids," she said. "I have no regrets I did it the other way."

Alschuler, who grew up in New York, spent time in Miami Beach as a child.

Her father ran VanLeigh Furniture Showrooms in New York and Miami until 1979. He formed the company in 1923.

Alschuler's community involvement stems from her love of the area.

"Miami Beach is like a hometown feeling," she said. "But it's still large enough to offer cultural happenings. I like being back here, I have old friends here.

"The beach is improving everywhere, and it's not just an overnight thing. The infrastructure has been improved, and now we'll see more improvement in the interior blocks.

"When I have out-of-town guests, they enjoy the South Beach scene the most."

I am happy to pay tribute to Joy Alschuler and the Miami Beach Kiwanis Club by reprinting this article from the Miami Herald. They have proven they can accept the challenge of change while still continuing their significant role in making the Miami Beach area a better place to live.

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH ZOGLIO

HON. JACK REED

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Joseph Zoglio of Providence, on the occasion of a testimonial honoring his years of dedication not only to senior citizens of Silver Lake but for his commitment to the city of Providence.

A member of numerous civic organizations, Mr. Zoglio was past president of the Senior Citizens of Hope in the Silver Lake section of Providence for 8 years, before his retirement in 1987. His unselfish concern for seniors is a true example of his character. Mr. Zoglio has been a friend and a source of strength to those in need.

After retiring from a 20-year career with the U.S. Postal Service and another 20 years with the Providence Journal Co., he directed his efforts to helping others enjoy their golden years. A lifelong resident of the Silver Lake section of Providence, he is also a WWII veteran of the U.S. Army.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in saluting Joseph Zoglio.

U.S.S. "NEVADA," THE HERO SHIP OF PEARL HARBOR

HON. BARBARA F. VUCANOVICH

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

THE HERO SHIP OF PEARL HARBOR

One of the overlooked facets of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor is the performance of the crew of the U.S.S. Nevada (BB-36).

No ship's crew in the history of the Navy, before Pearl Harbor or since, received as many Congressional Medals of Honor and Navy Crosses.

SITREP DECEMBER 6-7

The average age of the 1,440 crew members of Nevada was under 19½ years. Fifteen officers above the rank of Ensign were assigned, and there were 105 Ensigns.

By happenstance, the only officer above the rank of Ensign on the ship at the commencement of the attack was a Lieutenant Commander in the Naval Reserve, who was actually "standing by" for the assigned "Officer with the Day's Duty."

When the attack commenced, the Officer of the Deck was a twenty-one-year-old Ensign less than a year out of the Naval Academy, and the Junior Officer of the Deck was a nineteen-year-old, newly commissioned Ensign in the Naval Reserve. Both were wounded shortly after the attack began.

Nevada was the oldest battleship present. Her sister ship, U.S.S. Oklahoma (BB-37), rolled over at her mooring. The next oldest ship, U.S.S. Pennsylvania (BB-38), suffered from bomb hits while in dry-dock. The next oldest ship, U.S.S. Arizona (BB-39), which has become a symbol of Pearl Harbor, blew up at her moorings very early in the attack.

When the fleet was ordered to put to sea, Nevada was the only battleship able to get underway.

In the soul searching environment following the attack, the role of the crew of Nevada was either downplayed or overlooked. How could a ship with only one Reserve Lieutenant Commander, and a very young OOD and JOOD possibly get underway? How would this appear in the soul searching of "unpreparedness" during the following long drawn out post mortem investigations addressing senior officials?

Oddly, no one ever questioned the Officer of the Deck, nor delved very deeply into what had happened on this ship.

The situation actually dated back to 1916 when this ship was commissioned. The original crew chose the nickname "Cheer-Up Ship" and passed this down to its successors. 87 percent of the "disciplinary cases" occurring on the ship in 1941 were for "fighting ashore." All of these were dismissed with a warning at Executive Officer's mast. The standard defense was, "Commander, I was in this bar down town, and only had two beers. Then someone said their ship was better than Nevada. A fight started. The Shore Patrol arrested me and sent me back to the ship." Many years later the Executive Officer confessed that he had no intention of disciplining any sailor who believed his ship was the best ship in the Navy. In ensuing years, some of the crew confessed that knowing this, they took advantage of the leniency and started a fight in order to get a free ride back to Pearl Harbor in the paddy wagon.

The 0.50 caliber machine gun nest at the top of the mainmast was unofficially "out of bounds" for officers. The rumor was that since 1916, the Marine Detachment which manned these guns, had been conducting a floating poker game. Indeed, when it rained or in other foul weather, a canopy would appear over the "bird bath."

Despite the career enhancing rules involving engineering performance by the Engineering Officer (the less fuel used the better), the Engineering Officer never let any of his six boilers go "cold iron" unless he had to shut it down to repair it. All boilers not in use to provide auxiliary power while in port, were kept heated with a small head of steam provided.

By happenstance, there was a platform halfway up the mainmast on which four 0.30 caliber machine guns had been mounted. This was often used by junior officers as an "unofficial punishment platform" for minor transgressions by their enlisted personnel. The "excuse" was to post a watch to spot Captain's gigs and Admiral's barges passing the ship in order to render proper side honors. The actual reason was that the stack gasses wafted over this platform and easily taught enlisted personnel not to transgress against the rules.

The Gunnery Officer was not very popular with the crew. There were two dummy "antiaircraft loading machines" on the AA Deck, which were in continual use. Practically every member of the 1,440 man crew had spent several hours "training" at these loading machines. It made no difference whether they were cooks, bakers, boiler tenders, electricians, or whatever.

During the 2000-2400 watch on December 6th, the Chief Warrant Gunner suggested to the OOD that following taps at 2200, all water tight doors not involving living spaces be closed. This was a precaution during a massive change in the main battery ammunition, in which the 1,440 14" shells and the two seventy-five pound bags of smokeless powder assigned each shell, were being replaced with heavier ammunition, and larger powder bags.

It is not known how prepared in comparison other ships were. Probably none had all boilers ready to come up to steam; probably none had Marines playing poker near their 0.50 caliber machine guns; probably none had posted sailors on the 0.30 caliber platform; some may have had some degree of watertight integrity; and some may have indulged in the total-crew evolutions at their AA loading machines. Some may even have harbored convictions that their ship was a better ship than Nevada.

And so on December 7, 1941, the crew set about proving its convictions.

Aside from the 0.50 caliber and 0.30 caliber machine guns, Nevada's AA Battery consisted of ten open mount 5"/25 caliber guns. Five were controlled from a starboard director on the Sky Control platform above the bridge, and five from the port director. The port director was inoperative being modified to track aircraft going 210 knots vice the 140 knot capability of the starboard director. There were no 20mm, 40mm, or 1.1" guns which played such a major part in fleet defense at Midway in June of 1942.

At each gun, there was a locked "ready box" with forty rounds of ammunition.

Routinely, there were around 150 men working on the AA deck, either in routine maintenance or at the dummy practice machines. 90 of these were actually assigned to specific guns.

It is not clear who saw the first attacking planes. The Boatswain's Mate of the Watch observed bomb(s) falling on Ford Island concurrently with the OOD's seeing a torpedo plane drop a torpedo and peel off, displaying the red circles under the wing. The General Alarm was sounded, and by the time the OOD climbed the two ladders to the AA gun deck, all of the guns were firing. A Chief Petty Officer had taken a sledge and knocked the locks off the ready boxes. He has also seen to it that the firing cutouts which restricted the guns from firing above a 65 degree angle (for safety in peace) had been pulled.

The OOD was also an AA Director officer. By the time he climbed the additional ladders to the Sky Control Platform, his director was already tracking a bomber. It was obvious that with so many AA bursts in the air, that no one had any idea which batteries from which ships were tracking the same aircraft. LCDR Mitsuo Fuchida who led the air attack noted in his writings how surprised he was that there was so much anti-aircraft fire so quickly.

In reality, the duel between the AA guns and bombers was a Mexican stand-off. The bombers were very inaccurate, and the AA Fire was very inaccurate. The gun directors using analog gears would calculate the course, speed, height, and range to a bomber, and then calculate the fuze setting necessary to hit the enemy. The director then sent signals to each gun, activating pointers which instructed the crews to match the signals. Because of safety practices, the guns were never fired above a 65 degree angle, and because of competitive judging practices, never were fired at targets approaching more than forty-five degrees ahead or abaft the beam, or flying less than 8,000 feet or more than 10,000 at a speed between 100 and 120 knots.

Even with these "given" the accuracy of the guns was not good. The bombers were even less accurate, as they had no way to calculate the winds, nor bomb sights capable of translating the height, course, or speed of the aircraft into a solution for accurate targeting.

On the other hand, the Japanese dive bombers and torpedo planes could be accurately targeted by their pilots by simply flying towards the targets. In the absence of 20mm, 40mm or 1.1" guns, the dive bombers and torpedo planes enjoyed all the advantages.

The Japanese assigned four torpedo planes to attack Nevada. During survey operations in 1989–1990, one of these torpedoes was found in the mud off the Nevada moorings. Two Kate torpedo planes were also found in the mud, one slightly forward of the beam and one slightly abaft of the beam of Nevada moorings. It is believed that one was shot down by the Marines in the "bird bath" and the other by the sailors on the mid-mast platform. Only one torpedo struck Nevada, on the port side at about Number 2 turret. This left a 20′ × 40′ hole in her side. Because the ship was well closed up. the flooding was confined to the proximate compartments.

The other battleships and the cruiser Helena were not so fortunate. The three battleships nested outboard of the others all sank from torpedo hits, the Oklahoma rolling over.

In the initial dive bombing attacks, bombs exploded on Nevada's forecastle and one amidships on the starboard side, starting fires in both instances. The dive bombers returned to strafe, and several men were killed or wounded, including the Officer of the Deck who was severely wounded by a bullet which passed completely through his thigh.

During this phase of the attack, the U.S.S. Arizona blew up at the moorings directly ahead of Nevada, showering Nevada with a great deal of debris, and injuring or killing other personnel.

A fleet signal was made for all ships to sortie. Because the Nevada's boilers were not "cold" the ship was able to get underway in record time. By this time, the nineteen year old JOOD had also been wounded, and the conning of the ship was left to the ship's Chief Quartermaster. With Arizona burning furiously ahead, and a dredging line off the stern, the maneuvering of the ship was a masterpiece of seamanship.

As Nevada passed close by Arizona, additional fires broke out along the starboard side. Most were not severe, but burned several crewmen who refused to leave their AA guns.

During the sortie, the second wave of attackers appeared, and chose Nevada as the main target since she was by far the largest ship underway. There was terrible carnage on the AA Deck. Out of the 90 officers and men assigned to the batteries, and the personnel who served as relief crews, fifty men were killed and over 100 wounded. Yet, throughout the battle, all guns were kept continuously in action. Only one AA officer escaped wounds; all of the CPOs were killed or wounded; and only three of the Gun Captains escaped death or wounds.

As Nevada sortied, crews of other ships who saw her stopped for a moment and cheered. The bombs from the second attack left fourteen fires burning from hits and near misses, with a massive fire on the forecastle from a fire that ignited the ship's aviation gasoline and its paint locker. In order to save the forward magazines, more counter flooding forward was ordered, making the Nevada appear to be sinking by the head.

Fearing a third attack which might sink the ship in the channel, she was ordered to run aground near Dry Dock #1. This signal was ignored, and an Emergency flag was placed above it, and the ship reluctantly was grounded on Hospital Point.

More Congressional Medals of Honor and more Navy Crosses were awarded to crew members for their conduct during the Japanese attack than had ever been awarded to any ship's crew—before or after. There were many hundreds of acts of bravery that went unnoticed on practically every ship present. There is no record of a single person involved in the attack, whether in the Army, the Army Air Corps, Marine Corps or the Navy failing to do their best for their defense.

HONORING DR. MANUEL CEREIJO

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge Dr. Manuel Cereijo for being chosen by the selection committee of the Hispanic Engineer National Achievement Awards as the winner of the 1991 University Level—Lifetime Achievement Award. This award was originated to acknowledge Hispanics who have made exceptional contributions and a difference in the fields of science, engineering, education, and technology.

Dr. Manuel Cereijo, a professor of engineering at Florida International University in Miami, was presented this award on October 12, 1991 at the Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles, CA at an event called "Success Through Education: A Salute to Hispanic Excellence."

Dr. Cereijo has expressed his commitment and dedication to our educational system. His expertise in engineering, scientific and technical education earned him the opportunity for this very special honor. He has performed essential research activities in engineering and science in the last 25 years, and has three patents in the area of high-technology manufacturing. In addition, he is the author of two textbooks, and has written hundreds of articles for technical journals, national and international magazines and newspapers.

In addition to this very special honor, Dr. Cereijo received the "Engineer of the Year" award in 1988 by the Association of Cuban Engineers. He is the national coordinator for the Southeast United States of the National Hispanic Scholarship Fund. Dr. Cereijo also created a plan for 250 engineering students, who arrived in Miami during the Mariel exodus, to be accepted in Florida International University's engineering program in 1981. These engineering students were able to successfully earn their engineering degrees in the United States.

With his outstanding credentials and obvious dedication to his profession, it is no wonder that Dr. Cereijo has received these honors. I commend him for his exceptional work.

VETERANS DAY

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute to the American Legion's Post 7 in Newport, RI. On this Veterans Day, we certainly owe these fine American citizens a special honor.

I will be joining many Rhode Islanders this coming Monday to recognize and pay tribute to the tremendous impact that American Legion's Post 7 and other veterans have on our everyday activities. We must always remind our citizenry that veterans are not simply a part of our Nation's past. They are not simply soldiers who fought in a war to keep our national borders intact. Instead, we must always—not just on Veterans Day—remember that the bravery and self-sacrifice of these honorable citizens of Newport and other communities affects the present-day lives of not only Americans, but free people throughout the world.

For example, just this past Tuesday, cities and towns in Rhode Island and across the Nation held elections for mayor and local offices. Our right to choose our leaders democratically, as we recently did in Rhode Island, would not exist were it not for the fact that hundreds of thousands of brave Americans—such as the fine members of post 7—were willing to make the ultimate sacrifice to defend our democratic form of government, embodied by our cherished right to vote.

Who would have thought several years ago that we would today be witnessing the liberation of Eastern Europe and the collapse of communism in the Soviet Union. In a short time, the world has gone from an environment marked by mistrust and nuclear threat to one of hope for long-term peace and freedom from tyranny. These miraculous events did not happen by accident. Rather, they are a direct result of the diligence and fortitude of the forces of democracy, of which our veterans have played such a key role.

Those who have died for this Nation can only fail to the extent that we fail them. They gave their all, and we must do nothing less than grant them the benefits and care they so clearly deserve. If we fail them, we let down far more than our veterans: we fail our country, we desecrate our heritage, and we belittle the rights and freedoms that they fought to preserve.

On this Monday, I pledge to redouble my efforts in Congress to strongly support veterans medical and other programs. My record clearly recognizes how deeply indebted we are to the sacrifice made by veterans such as those of American Legion Post 7.

We can all remember the near tragedy which took place late last year when Congress did not pass legislation granting veterans a 1991 COLA. I was pleased to join the effort early this year to pass this belated but much-needed veterans COLA bill.

I was also pleased to play a part in the effort early this year to pass the most comprehensive legislation granting additional benefits to veterans exposed to the deadly herbicide, agent orange. The scientific evidence is indisputable linking agent orange exposure to certain illnesses, and Congress did well to pass this much-needed legislation.

Finally, it is fitting that just last week, Congress sent to the President legislation granting veterans A 3.7-percent COLA for 1992. I look forward to the President's quick signature to this bill so that our veterans receive the compensation they so clearly deserve.

The members of American Legion Post 7 deserve our deepest gratitude and respect on this Veterans Day. I urge every Rhode Islander, if they get a chance to see a member of post 7, think about their irreplaceable contribution and take the time to say, "Thanks for keeping us free."

TRIBUTE TO CHARLES C. ZETTEL

HON. DAVE CAMP

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, it is with great admiration that I rise today to recognize a truly outstanding individual from mid-Michigan. Charlie Zettel, a lifetime resident of Gladwin County, passed away on September 29, 1991, after a battle with cancer.

Mr. Zettel was known as Mr. Gladwin by many. His activities truly illustrate the dedication this man had to his community. A member of organizations such as the Fraternal Order of the Eagles, Knights of Columbus, and the Rotary Club, his voluntarism was evident.

His civic duty is also apparent by the fact that he was a member of the Gladwin City Council for 28 years, airport commissioner, Gladwin County Chamber of Commerce member, city planning commission member, Gladwin City Business Association member, and cofounder of the Gladwin Development Corp. He truly was dedicated to his community and its citizens.

Someone once said that "the way I look at Charlie, he was an Eagle Scout who continued to earn merit badges for the rest of his life." This is an excellent quote to describe a man who used to work 16-hour days regularly between running his store, Zettel's Drug Store, and taking care of city council business.

There are many community accomplishments that Charlie Zettel could claim as his, including the modernization of offices. When Mr. Zettel saw the benefits of computers, he went to Mid-Michigan Community College to take classes and learn how to use computers. Soon he was helping others in the community learn how to use computers.

The accomplishment that he was most proud of, however, was the establishment of the Gladwin Airport, which was recently renamed Charles C. Zettel Memorial Airport. As a pilot himself he was named airport commissioner in 1968, and held that post until shortly before his death. He oversaw many changes in the airport, including renovations in the early 1970's to include a terminal building, cement runways, and lighted landing devices.

He also found a way to use his store to benefit the community. If it meant opening the store at midnight or going in on a Sunday in order to fill an emergency prescription, he would do it.

Mr. Speaker, I know you will join me in commending this great man. It was once said of him that "what it came down to was anytime there was anything good for the community, he was involved." Charlie Zettel is a man that will truly be missed.

PRECISION TRADING CORP. AS ONE OF TOP 10 HISPANIC BUSINESSES

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to recognize Precision Trading Corp. which was recently selected as one of the 10 most important Hispanic businesses in Dade County by the Greater Miami Chamber of Commerce and the Hispanic Heritage Council.

Along with the other businesses, Precision Trading Corp. was presented with this award at the Omni International Hotel at a luncheon honoring these distinguished firms. The businesses were selected from a list of the 100 most important Hispanic firms in the United States which was published in Hispanic Business magazine.

Greater Miami Chamber of Commerce President-elect Carlos Arboleya said that these firms were selected for their efforts for the Hispanic community and for their contribution to the economic development of Dade County.

Accepting the award for Precision Trading Corp. was the company's president, Israel Lapciuc, who said that he hoped his firm would be an example to other businesses, that with work, honesty, and presentation, anyone can reach the heights in this country.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Precision Trading Corp. for the contributions it has made to the economy of south Florida, providing economic opportunity, economic development, and employment for the people of the Miami area.

REMARKS BY DR. BERT VOGELSTEIN

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues some remarks made by Dr. Bert Vogelstein before the congressional biomedical research caucus on Monday, October 28, 1991. But first, I would like to say a few words about him.

Dr. Bert Vogelstein is professor of oncology at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, where he directs the molecular genetics laboratory. His primary interest is the study of human colorectal cancer. Dr. Vogelstein and his colleagues have discovered a series of genetic alterations responsible for this type of tumor. The principles he has uncovered about colon cancer seem to apply to many other tumor types, giving hope to the idea that a basic understanding of the molecular basis of most common cancers are within our grasp. He has received many honors for his research, including the prestigious Bristol-Meyers Squibb Award for Distinguished Cancer Research. His talk today is "The New Understanding of Human Cancer: Implications for Health Care." Dr. Vogelstein's text of remarks follows:

Dr. Bert Vogelstein, it is an honor to speak before you today and especially to follow Dr. Bishop. I follow him not only temporally at this briefing, but as you will see, our work on human cancers follows in the footsteps of his pioneering work on experimental tumor systems and his juxtaposition provides an excellent example of how basic research often leads to clinical advances.

I will discuss three related topics this afternoon: first, how I got involved in cancer research; second, recent results on the cause of human cancer; and third, ways in which this research can be applied to treatment and prevention of cancer in the future. My first contact with cancer patients came in 1974 when I was a resident in Pediatrics at John Hopkins. Part of my responsibilities there were to take care of young patients with cancer. That was, to say the least, a very frustrating experience. It was frustrating emotionally because there was little we could do for many of the patients. But that frustration was compounded by an intellectual one, the frustration that we were dealing with a disease about which we knew nothing. That kind of experience prompted many young physicians like me to enter research careers, most often through training at the National Cancer Institute, to try to learn something—indeed, anything—about this mysterious condition. In the last several years, that research has paid off beyond anyone's expectations. I will tell you today about colon cancers. But similar stories could be told about many other common tumor types.

Colon tumors progress through several stages, from normal colon to benign polyps (called adenomas), which gradually grow until a cancer forms. Our work over the last decade has been designed to understand the cause of each of these steps. The bottom line of these studies is that this progression is caused by a series of mutations, that is, alterations in genes. There are four genes which normally control colon growth. When a mutation in one of these genes occurs, the gene does not work properly and a small tumor—a polyp—results. If an additional mutation occurs in the polyp, it grows larger, and so on. When enough mutations have occurred, all the controls are broken down, and a full-blown cancer results. Some of the mutations are inherited from parent to child, and that is why some families have a very high incidence of specific forms of cancer, including colon cancer. Most of the mutations occur after birth, either as mistakes that cells unfortunately make without any outside interference or as result of exposure to chemical carcinogens or other environmental insults.

Now I would like to try to give you some glimpse of the future, how this new knowledge about the cause of cancer is going to lead in the future to completely new ways of caring for patients.

Let us discuss therapy first. Conceptually, the best way to treat a cancer which has lost its controlling genes is to replace those normal genes. Can we do that? The first answer to that question is affirmative. In the test tube, at least, one can put back a normal, non-mutated gene into the cancer cells. In every case, the cancer completely stops growing, stops dead in its tracks. Can we do this in a patient? Can we use gene therapy to replace defective genes in cancer cells growing in a patient rather than a test tube? Not yet, although several laboratories are hard at work on this problem. And at any rate that technology is advancing, it is a safe bet that this technological hurdle will be overcome in the foreseeable future.

Treatment involves patients who already have cancer. What is much better than treatment is prevention. It takes 20 or more years to accumulate enough mutations to take a normal cell to a fully developed cancer cell. That provides a huge window in time in which to detect tumors which have not yet become malignant. Any tumor which is detected at a benign stage, or even at an early malignant stage, can be cured by relatively simple surgical means. What we need to do is develop tests that will allow the detection of tumors before they have invaded the body. And since the cause of tumors is mutations, we are hopeful that the mutations themselves can be used as tools for such early detection.

There are many ways one can envision using these tools. As I mentioned before, some of the mutations are inherited from parent to child. Patients who inherit these mutations are at great risk for developing cancer, and they often do so at an early age. For example, one young man who was presented to our clinics was only 22 years old when he was found to have colon cancer. Because he was so young, we looked at other members of his family. We found that his mother died from colon cancer at an early age and three of his sisters, all in their twenties were each found to have colon tumors. Obviously a very sad case. Two other sisters did not yet have colon tumors, but these girls were young, one was 9 and one was 12. Were they going to develop disease like the other members of their family? Just a short time ago, it would have been impossible to tell, but now that we know the gene that is mutated and causes this family's predisposition, it's easy to tell. We did a simple blood test on these girls and found out that they did not inherit the mutant gene. Similarly, all the cousins, aunts, uncles and extended family members of this kindred can undergo the same simple blood test to determine who has inherited the mutant gene and who has not. Those who are not affected, are spared great expense, discomfort, and anxiety. For those who are affected, we can try to prevent the onset of cancers using drugs or other measures; it is often easier to prevent than to cure if you know who is at risk.

So, in summary, the new knowledge about the cause of cancer is already making significant differences to patients. What is more important is that this is just the tip of the iceberg. The contrast between what we knew about cancer when I was a resident and what we know about cancer today is dramatic. The frustration that we felt back then has given way to great excitement and optimism. The excitement stems from the fact that we finally understand the basics of what is wrong with the cancer cell; the mystery has been removed. It is also important to point out that almost all of the work on cancer genes that Dr. Bishop and I discussed has been done in the United States, largely under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute. Therefore, the revolution in understanding cancer that has taken place in the last few years should be a great source of pride to all Americans, and especially to the Congress, whose members have made this revolution possible through its continuing support of The National Cancer Institute.

ON THE RETIREMENT OF AN EXEMPLARY AMERICAN

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in his lifetime, Dr. LaVern A. Freeh has made an unusual contribution to production, marketing and distribution of food throughout the world. Many millions of people throughout the world eat better today because of his life's work.

Dr. Freeh is retiring next month, and since he is a native North Dakotan, I wish to recognize his contribution to farm cooperative marketing and food processing and distribution, and to summarize the life of an exemplary American. I also wish him a very enjoyable retirement.

Vern was born on July 10, 1926, on a Depression-era farm near Harvey, ND. Following graduation from high school, in 1944, he enlisted in the Marines and served in the South Pacific during the final year of the war. He returned home in mid-1946 to farm with his father. He also taught school at the local, one-room rural school, though he hadn't yet attended college.

In 1947, he was recruited to play football at North Dakota State University. Beginning with the third game of his freshman year, he started 34 consecutive games, playing both offense and defense, and earned 4 varsity letters. During his junior year, in 1949, he played all but 20 minutes out of the nine-game schedule and was voted as the team's most valuable player. In recognition of Vern's athletic accomplishments, he was inducted into the North Dakota Athletic Hall of Fame on October 5, 1991.

When Vern graduated from NDSU in 1951, he was named one of the 15 most outstanding graduating seniors. Following college, he taught vocational agriculture and coached football for 6 years at Linton, ND. In 1957, he moved to East Lansing, MI, where he served as an assistant football coach at Michigan State University.

There he also began to pursue his masters and doctorate degrees. He earned an M.S. degree in ag economics and his doctorate in communications. In 1962, after receiving his Ph.D., he joined the faculty at the University of Minnesota. He served there with distinction for 18 years.

During his tenure at the University of Minnesota, Dr. Freeh became deeply involved in international agricultural development. He rose to the rank of assistant dean for Agriculture, Forestry, and Home Economics and director of International Programs for the University. He received numerous honors for his work, including:

Outstanding Service Citation from the Chancellor of the Republic of Germany in 1968 for work on behalf of German agriculture.

Knighted by the President of Finland in 1969 for work on behalf of Finnish agriculture and Finnish youth.

Outstanding Minnesota Citizen of the Year in 1976 by the State Community Education Association for work on behalf of public community education.

Distinguished National Epsilon Sigma Phi Meritorious Service Award in 1977 for work on behalf of humanity.

Outstanding Alumni Achievement Award from North Dakota State University in 1977.

In 1980, Dr. Freeh left academic life and joined the staff of Land O'Lakes, a farm supply and dairy marketing cooperative based in Minnesota. Under his leadership, the cooperative initiated several new programs for increased involvement in international affairs. Since then, Land O'Lakes has built a reputation for the quality of training and technical assistance for improving overseas agricultural production and food processing systems.

As a result of Dr. Freeh's efforts and the programs undertaken by the cooperative, Land O'Lakes received two major national awards:

The Fowler-McCracken Commission Corporate Award in 1984 for outstanding leadership in alleviating world hunger, and

The President's World Without Hunger Award in 1985 to the corporation that's done the most to alleviate world hunger.

In addition to his responsibilities at Land O'Lakes, Dr. Freeh serves on several State, national, and international committees and boards, including:

Board chairperson, Eastern European Cooperative Business Development Center, Washington, DC.

Chairperson, Overseas Cooperative Development Committee, Washington, DC.

Chairperson, Governor's Ag Advisory Committee, State of Minnesota.

Board member, CARE, New York City.

Board member, National Cooperative Business Association, Washington, DC.

Founding board member, Jamaican Agricultural Development Foundation, Kingston, Jamaica.

Board member, North Dakota State University Development Foundation.

Member, President's Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Assistance, Washington, DC.

As Land O'Lakes vice president of public and international affairs, Dr. Freeh has often testified before Congress on issues relating to food aid, development assistance, and participation by cooperatives in international development programs. He also has been responsible for representing the cooperative's position on domestic agricultural issues in an effort to help Members of Congress understand the needs and concerns of midwestern farmers, ranchers, and rural residents.

SOUTH BEACH ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS FACE POSITIVE CHANGES

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, overcrowding in South Beach elementary schools has yielded positive change for the area. Leroy D. Fienberg Elementary and Ida M. Fisher Elementary schools have merged, while a new school, South Pointe Elementary has been opened. The reorganization will relieve overcrowding, make new programs available and introduce a new teaching method. The Miami Herald recently brought attention to this reorganization benefiting the parents, teachers, and students of South Beach in an article by Mr. Aaron S. Rubin. That article follows:

When school starts in September, one new elementary school in South Beach will open while two other ones will merge.

The realignment—the Beach hasn't seen such a reorganization in decades—will mean vast changes for South Beach teachers, students and parents. Overcrowding will be relieved. Parents and residents will benefit from new programs. And a revolutionary new teaching method will debut in South Beach.

The first manifestation will be at Leroy D. Fienberg Elementary and Ida M. Fisher Elementary in South Beach. The two schools will reunite in September, after five years of being apart.

The merger will come about because South Pointe Elementary will open in September, allowing some Fienberg-Fisher students to transfer there. Five years ago, Fienberg-Fisher Elementary School was the largest grade school in the nation, with nearly 1,600 students. Now, the newly reunited school will have 500 fewer students.

Teachers already are relishing the extra space and other benefits the merger should bring.

"Each one of us will be able to have our own classroom, which will be wonderful," said teacher Valerie Wilkerson, 34. Before, teachers had to share.

Teacher Bryna Berman said she looks forward to the mix of younger and older students.

MERGER BRINGS UNITY

Fienberg didn't have a student newspaper. Now, older students can write one for the whole school. And older students can serve as tutors for their younger schoolmates, said Berman, who will switch from teaching second graders to fifth-and sixth-graders.

Emilio Fox, director of the Dade schools region that includes Beach schools, said better community health would lead to better learners.

"We're very interested in seeing it work not only from an education standpoint," Fox said, "but also in acting as the catalyst for whatever agencies are out there to come into our school and kind of pitch in with us."

At South Pointe Elementary, a different kind of partnership is leading to a new way of teaching.

A private company will receive public school money to run South Pointe, the first such partnership in the nation.

The company, Education Alternatives Inc., is using a novel teaching method that it says has boosted student achievement at its two private schools in Minnesota and Arizona.

Teachers at South Pointe will let students decide what they'll learn—and how they'll learn it.

A MODEL FOR FUTURE?

Dr. Michael Krop, a member of the Dade County School Board, said he hopes the company's methods—and outside funding—will serve as a method for educating underprivileged children.

"We are doing very poorly with the kind of background these children have in other conventional schools, not only in Dade County but throughout the country," he said. "We're hoping we can show some succcsses here that are not being shown elsewhere."

The merger, too, could be good news for parents and families.

Instead of two Parent-Teacher Associations, there will be one—so parents with children in upper and lower grades won't have to choose. And separate programs that taught and assisted parents will be combined.

HUB FOR COMMUNITY

Perhaps most significantly, educators and social service agencies are working to make Fienberg-Fisher a "full-service school," that is, a community hub where education, health care and other services are offered.

Fienberg-Fisher is using part of a $75,000 grant from the private Danforth Foundation to arrange the project, which calls for such agencies as the Stanley C. Myers Community Health Center and the state department of Health and Rehabilitative Services to set up an office at the school.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the leadership of Mr. Emilio Fox, the director of South Beach area schools in Dade County, for helping to oversee a successful reorganization of South Beach schools. I would also like to commend the principal of South Pointe Elementary, Ms. Patricia Parhan and the principal of Fienberg-Fisher Elementary, Mr. Matthew Lawrence for aiding in this innovative transition.

CONGRATULATIONS TO LEVON TER-PETROSYAN

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a resolution which congratulates Mr. Levon Ter-Petrosyan on becoming the first democratically elected President of Armenia. The resolution also comments the Armenian people for continuing their difficult quest for democracy and free-market economics in their country. I would like to invite my colleagues to join us as cosponsors of this important resolution.

Armenia deserves much of the credit for fueling the democratic movements in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. In February 1988, Armenians took to the streets en mass to protest the authoritarian and oppressive nature of their government. Many experts believe that the prodemocracy movements in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union used the Armenian protests as a model. As we all know, the net result of these national democratic movements was the ouster of entrenched, corrupt Communist dictatorships.

We must encourage democratic tendencies wherever and whenever possible. Democracy in Armenia is in its embryonic stage. The U.S. Congress has a vital role to play in nurturing and encouraging its growth. Please join us in sending the message to the Armenian people that the Congress supports its efforts for independence and democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the test of my resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point.

H. CON. RES.—

Congratulating the president and the people of Armenia for their democratic elections and urging the President of the United States to recognize Armenia's declaration of independence and to extend full diplomatic recognition to the Republic of Armenia.

Whereas in February 1988, the Armenian people engaged in mass public protests against their oppressive communist government, thereby creating a model for the other anticommunist protest movements throughout Eastern Europe and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics;

Whereas the Armenian protests and similar protests throughout Eastern Europe and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have caused the communist system to collapse and the liberation of millions of people;

Whereas the Armenian people yearn for and are striving for the establishment of democracy and a free-market economic system in their country;

Whereas on September 21, 1991, in a national referendum held in compliance with the Soviet constitution and monitored by international observers, the people of the Armenian republic voted overwhelmingly for independence from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics;

Whereas on October 16, 1991, the Republic of Armenia held its first multiparty presidential election, selecting Levon Ter-Petrosian, a former political prisoner, as its first president; and

Whereas these elections are recognized as being free and fair:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress—

(1) congratulates President Levon Ter-Petrosian for becoming the first democratically elected president of the Republic of Armenia;

(2) commends the people of Armenia for successfully executing Armenia's first free, fair, and democratic presidential election, and encourages them to continue their course toward democracy and a free-market economy; and

(3) urges the President of the United States to recognize Armenia's declaration of independence, extend full diplomatic recognition to the independent Republic of Armenia, and support Armenia's application to join international organizations, including the United States and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

DOES AMERICA CARE ABOUT FAMILIES?

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, on November 6, European Community labor ministers reached a political agreement over plans to harmonize workers' rights to parental leave throughout Western Europe.

The agreement reached by the European labor ministers guarantees women a minimum of 14 weeks paid maternity leave. The agreement provides that workers on leave must be compensated at adequate levels and that those levels should not be less than the sums available to a worker during sick leave. The agreement prohibits the dismissal of pregnant workers for any reason related to the pregnancy, provides that such workers shall have the right to transfer to alternative duties if their current job involves a risk to the health and safety of the worker, and restricts the ability of employers to assign pregnant workers to night work. The agreement further provides that this is a minimum standard, below which protection cannot fall, and can never be used to justify a lowering of existing standards.

This is just a part of the support system that the European countries have established to protect families. Indeed, the provisions just agreed to by the European labor ministers are a lesser standard than those provided by law by many of the member nations of the European Community. But even the United Kingdom, which has one of the weakest laws in Europe, provides that women are entitled to at least 6 weeks maternity leave at 90 percent of their salary, followed by an additional 12 weeks of leave at minimum compensation. To the extent that the proposal of the labor ministers is controversial at all, it is because many feel that it does not go far enough.

It is discouraging and disturbing to compare this policy with the current status of the law in the United States. The Senate has recently passed legislation that would provide workers with 12 weeks of unpaid leave to provide for family members in the event of a crisis. Specifically, that legislation provides a worker would be entitled to 12 weeks of unpaid leave, leave that may be offset by any paid leave the employee has accrued, in the event of a birth or adoption, in order to care for a seriously ill parent, spouse, or child, or in the event of the worker's own illness. The legislation requires medical certification that an employee is either needed to care for an ill family member or is unable to perform the functions of his or her position. The Senate-passed bill exempts employees working less than 1,250 hours a year. Almost one-third of the women in the work force and one-fifth of all employees are working part time. The Senate-passed bill exempts employers employing less than 50 workers, thereby removing approximately 40 percent of the work force from coverage. The Senate bill exempts key employees, requires employees provide 30-days notice of intent to take leave, and permits employers to recapture health premiums paid on behalf of the employee in the event the employee does not return to work.

To call this legislation a minimum standard does not do justice to the word "minimum"; "least" is a more accurate term. Yet, we are being told that even this constitutes too great a burden on business for the President and perhaps a third of the House. The real cost, however, is being borne by American families. Too many families face an irreconcilable conflict between financial needs and emotional and physical needs. Faced with a need to provide care on the one hand and to provide income on the other, a worker unable to obtain leave has no rational choice. Either decision imposes unreasonable costs on that family and on society. The Family and Medical Leave Act, at minimal expense to employers, enables workers to provide necessary, crucial care at times of family crises without jeopardizing the economic livelihood of the family. This legislation benefits workers and their dependents, specifically, and the quality of life in this country, generally. Mr. Speaker, this is truly the minimum that we owe to our constituents.

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, the Allapattah Elementary School in Miami recently kicked off its red ribbon campaign, with a week full of events, October 19–26. The program of speakers, pep rallies, and games, launches a year long, day-to-day effort to prevent drug abuse. The Red Ribbon Committee under the leadership of committee chair, Ms. Maria Sarduy and cochair, Ms. C. Kary Marquez, has created a multidimensional drug prevention program at Allapattah Elementary.

Mr. Speaker, our children are often bombarded with negative peer pressure. The red ribbon campaign works to counteract those harmful influences by teaching Allapattah Elementary students that drugs steal your happiness. The program works through all of a students activities: Classroom studies, art and music classes, and recreation.

The substance abuse trust curriculum, sponsored by Dade County Public Schools, plays a significant role in the classroom. The children gain a foundation of knowledge about the dangerous effects of drug abuse through this class work. The cold hard facts about drug abuse work to dispel any myths about this killer of our children, families, and neighborhoods. An essay contest for the campaign challenges the writing skills of these young students to explain, in their own words, the evils of drug abuse.

The art and music programs at Allapattah Elementary also promote the antidrug theme at the red ribbon campaign. Door decorating contests and other art competitions rally students around antidrug themes through creative expression. Music classes work with students as they compose pep songs and rap pieces which melodically decry drugs.

I commend the leadership of Ms. Sarduy and Ms. Marquez for making the antidrug efforts of the red ribbon campaign an integral part of Allapattah. The Red Ribbon Committee should also be recognized for their contribution, these include: Mary Acebal, Annie Byrd, Thelma Clark, Raquel Cruz, Maria Del Gado, Mora Finch, Angel Forte, Mary Richard, Katrinka Gibson, Isabel Gonzales, Patricia Jackson, Anita Julien, Mareya Morino, Richard Muller, Barbara Myles, Odalys Perez, Gratha Pla, Ana Reyes, Judy Rodriquez, Cristina Rubino, Rodrigo Suarez, and Jacqueline Van Bell.

ENTERPRISE CAPITAL FORMATION ACT

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, today, I am joining over 40 of my colleagues in the House and over 20 in the Senate in introducing the Enterprise Capital Formation Act. This bipartisan effort responds to the need of small businesses to tap into equity markets.

While a strong supporter of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, I have long felt that eliminating the capital gains differential was its biggest flaw. Since the elimination of the capital gains differential, there has been a dramatic drop-off in venture capital investments. It has become much more difficult for small, start-up firms to raise the capital needed to expand and create jobs.

The Enterprise Capital Formation Act responds to this problem by providing a 50-percent deduction for investors who make long-term—greater than 5 years—venture capital investments, the first $100 million of paid-in capital, and greater deductions for those who make seed capital investments—the first $5 million of paid-in capital.

Small businesses are vital to the health of the American economy, but they often have great difficulty raising money from banks and the capital markets. These incentives should make small businesses less dependent on debt, and supply them with patient equity financing.

I believe that the question of capital gains taxation needs to be examined in a nonpartisan atmosphere. This bill is a good starting point. I do not view this as a growth package, but as a proposal to level the playingfield between large and small firms in the equity markets.

IN MEMORY OF O. WAYNE ROLLINS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor the memory of O. Wayne Rollins who passed away last month at age 79.

A native of Tunnel Hill, GA, Mr. Rollins grew up as a child of the Great Depression, working for $10 a week in a cotton mill in addition to his responsibilities on the family farm in the mornings and evenings. He attended a one-room school and graduated from Ringgold High School as valedictorian in 1930. Mr. Rollins went on to become a pioneer businessman, amassing a financial empire—Rollins, Inc.—worth more than $930 million.

In addition to his gift for financial genius, Mr. Rollins also was a great promoter of education. In 1986, he donated $10 million to Emory University in Atlanta as the first step toward building a $40 million laboratory facility which will encourage cross-disciplinary research among scientists who are working on possible cures for cancer, heart disease, genetic birth defects, diseases of children, and nervous system disorders such as Alzheimer's disease and schizophrenia.

Mr. Rollins had been honored for his contributions to Georgia colleges and universities by the Association of Private Colleges and Universities in Georgia. Buildings bearing his name are on the Georgia campuses of Berry College, and Young Harris College, at Kentucky's Cumberland College, and the Claudia

A. Rollins Center for Church Ministries at Georgia's Emory University is named in honor of his mother. He also has served on the board of trustees of Emory University, Young Harris College, and Berry College; a number of honorary degrees were bestowed on him.

For two decades, Mr. Rollins provided a large number of college scholarships for needy young people at four high schools and three colleges and universities.

He was the recipient of the Horatio Alger Award and the Golden Plate Award by the Academy of Achievement; named Georgia Philanthropist of the Year for 1987; received the National Philanthropist of the Year Award for 1988, and inducted into the Sales and Marketing Executives International Academy of Achievement for 1990. Mr. Rollins had served as a director of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and several major business and banking firms.

Mr. Rollins will long be remembered for his many contributions to the betterment of our State. I would like to extend my sympathies to his wife, Grace, and sons, Randall and Gary, At this time, I also would like to share with my colleagues the following articles from the Catoosa County News which best describe the unique character of this generous and successful man.

[From the Catoosa County News]

BUSINESSMAN O.W. ROLLINS DIES AT 79

O. Wayne Rollins, a Tunnel Hill farmer's son who worked for $10 a week in a cotton mill during the Great Depression and went on to amass a financial empire worth more than $930 million, died Friday at Emory University Hospital. He was 79.

Rollins, a Ringgold High School graduate who founded the multi-million Rollins Inc., died at 12:30 p.m. after being taken to the hospital for a pacemaker implant, said hospital spokeswoman Judy Smith.

Dr. Gloria Shatto, Berry College president, said Rollins was very important to the growth of the college, where he served as a trustee.

Rollins came on the Berry Board of Trustees in 1973 and was named trustee emeritus in 1983, Dr. Shatto said.

"He was a valuable friend to the college during his active years and had continued his interest in our progress," she said.

The Rollins Beef Research Center is named after him, and Rollins endowed the Rollins Work Professorship at the college. Several students annually received Rollins student-work scholarships, she said.

He had been on the Berry campus just last week, working on a project, Dr. Shatto said.

Rollins, who annually was listed by Forbes magazine as one of the nation's richest men, was a co-founder of Rollins Inc., one of the world's largest service companies. Forbes ranked him as the third richest Georgian and the 79th richest American.

Over the years, Rollins amassed an estimated 55,000 acres in Georgia, Florida and Delaware as well as 12,000 head of cattle. He earned a reputation as a tough negotiator who loved to buy land and hated to sell it. He was probably the largest non-corporate landholder in Georgia.

A winner of the Horatio Alger Award, Rollins never attended college, but he provided scores of college scholarships to needy students.

In 1987 Rollins was named Georgia's Philanthropist of the Year.

A native of Tunnel Hill, Rollins grew up on his family's farm and attended a one-room school-house. He graduated from Ringgold High School.

He took a job in 1931 in the winding room of Standard Coosa Thatcher, a Chattanooga, Tenn., cotton mill where he worked up to 72 hours a week at the Depression-era wage of $10. He kept working on the family farm in the mornings and evenings.

Although his investments ranged from radio and television stations to oil service companies, carpet manufacturing, real estate, cattle and citrus groves, Rollins' greatest success came in providing three varied services to homeowners: insect extermination, home security and lawn care.

In 1948, Rollins formed a partnership with his brother, John, marking the birth of Rollins Inc. Wayne bought a radio station and John sold cars.

In 1964, Rollins caught the attention of Wall Street with what is believed to be the first leveraged buyout—a $62.4 million acquisition of Orkin Exterminating Co. At the time, Rollins Inc. had revenues of only $9 million.

Rollins is survived by his wife, Grace Rollins; two sons, R. Randall Rollins and Gary W. Rollins of Atlanta; and a brother, John Rollins of Delaware.

O.W. ROLLINS REMEMBERED VERY FONDLY

(By Richard L. Ball)

Catoosa County's O. Wayne Rollins, the millionaire businessman who died last weekend, will be remembered for his commitment to education and his interest in young people, Catoosa County residents.

Bobby Plemons, administrative assistant to Commissioner Jack Rowan, said the Tunnel Hill native was an inspiration to the area's young people.

"Mr. Rollins believed in education and for several years has given scholarships to deserving graduating seniors to help with their college education," said Plemons. "He always did take a lot of interest in young people. I remember him speaking to my graduating class and he was very inspiring."

Although he kept up with all the modern technology of today's world, he was also able to apply "old-fashioned common sense" to everything that he did and I think this played a big part in his success," said Plemons.

He was also very interested in agriculture and took an active role in agriculture experimentation. He provided a lot of equipment and facilities to Berry College in the agriculture area, Plemons said.

"He was not the kind of person to leave details to someone else. He was right in there attending to each detail—leaving no loose ends," said Plemons.

"Personally, I think the people that had the privilege of hearing Mr. Rollins speak came away, inspired. He grew up through hard times and was an example of what a person can do if they just apply some hard work and common sense.

Plemons said Rollins had a deep desire to help Catoosa County, adding that he believed that to be the reason Rollins took a personal hand in purchasing land for an industrial site. He wanted to provide jobs for Catoosa Countians.

"Mr. Rollins was a real credit to our county and I have all kinds of admiration and respect for the man," said Plemons.

Elyse Cochran, executive director of the Catoosa County Chamber of Commerce and Economic Development Commission, called Rollins a unique and special individual.

"From his first full-time job with a starting salary of $10 per week until his approximate worth of one billion dollars at the time of his death, he exemplified the meaning of entrepreneurship," said Cochran.

"He never forgot where he came from and I feel that this is why he purchased the 400 acre site for industrial development. He saw that this would create jobs for his hometown and serve as a lasting contribution to the citizens of this community."

Mr. Rollins participated in various Chamber functions throughout the year which includes awarding a college scholarship to a Catoosa County senior each year.

His commitment to Catoosa County and its citizens will be long remembered, said Cochran.

Rollins was born in Tunnel Hill in 1912 and graduated from Ringgold High School as valedictorian in 1930. In 1948 he and his brother, John, became business partners. John operated an automobile dealership. Wayne operated a radio station where the dealership could advertise its business.

SOUTHERN FLORIDA CHAPTER OF THE LEUKEMIA SOCIETY OF AMERICA

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize the important work of the Southern Florida Chapter of the Leukemia Society of America in our Miami community.

On October 30, 1991, the Leukemia Society held a fundraiser to raise money for leukemia research. This fundraiser, called the F.G. Bodner Man of the Year, was a major event emceed by Tony Segreto, the sports director of Miami's Channel 4. The event was successfully chaired by Rebecca Fisher, corporate counsel to Capital Bank. Ms. Fisher recently lost her father to leukemia after his year long battle with the illness and wanted to do something to prevent others from suffering with this terrible disease.

The Leukemia Society is a national health agency based on volunteers like Ms. Fisher dedicated to seeking the cause and eventual cure of leukemia. Nationwide, the society has 57 chapters all working toward raising money for research and educating the public about leukemia. Leukemia strikes 74,000 Americans each year but the survival rate has increased from 15 percent 20 years ago to 77 percent today. The society supports five major programs: research, patient-aid, public and professional education, and community service.

I wish to also recognize other members of the F.G. Bodner Man of the Year Committee, who worked with Ms. Fisher to make this event so successful. They are: Jennifer Glaser, Lynn D. Evens, Lois Shaver, Allison Ullman, Wendy Sacks, Scott Simowitz, Sally Warner, Michele Vogel, Howard Glass, Steve Goldman, and Monica Hollar.

A 100-YEAR ANNIVERSARY TRIBUTE TO THE SAN BERNARDINO PUBLIC LIBRARY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention today the 100th anniversary of the San Bernardino Public Library. The library will be honored on its centennial at a gala dinner to be held in San Bernardino, CA, later this month.

Public libraries are a unique demonstration of the freedoms we share and often take for granted in the United States. How important it is to remember that people across the globe are willing to risk their lives and homes for the opportunity to have even the simplest freedoms we enjoy every day. Among these freedoms most basic to our democratic society is the right to uncensored information. Our public libraries serve to remind us of this freedom and others.

The city of San Bernardino's elected officials appointed the first public library board of trustees in December 1891, and the library first opened its doors in 1892. The first branch library was built in 1929 to accommodate San Bernardino's growing population.

Over the years, the library has served many critical needs, serving as a reference and information center, a door to learning for children and adults, a community activity center, and a popular materials library. The library also attempts to provide educational activities and opportunities for the public which are consistent with library goals.

Last year, San Bernardino Public Library served 68,000 library-card holders, 700,000 items were borrowed, 102,000 reference and information questions were answered for the public, and 285,000 children attended library programs. In addition, some 300,000 people a year visit the Feldheym Library to consult or borrow.

The mission statement of the San Bernardino Public Library includes the following: "It is vitally important that every citizen in our community have ready and free access to the world of ideas, information, and creative experience. To this end, San Bernardino Public Library's mission is to provide for the public convenient access to information, library materials, life-long learning opportunities, cultural events, and appropriate new technologies, and to promote our services to make them known to the community."

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me and our colleagues today in recognizing the contributions that the San Bernardino Public Library has made to the community over the past 100 years. I know that San Bernardino looks forward to the next 100 years with assurance that the library will continue to meet the needs of our citizens. It is fitting that the House pay tribute to this fine facility today.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY'S FOOD-PATCH: A SENSE OF COMMITMENT THAT IS TACKLING HUNGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, some people talk about problems in their communities. Some people do something about them. For the last 4 years, the people at Food-PATCH [People Allied to Combat Hunger] have done a great deal to tackle the problem of hunger in our community head on.

Westchester County has a serious hunger problem. In fact, the county is confronting the fastest growing hungry population in the country. That fact is tragic, and it is an even greater tragedy that more than half of these hungry people—more than 50,000—are children. That situation is criminal. We cannot allow it to continue.

All of us in this House understand full well the ramifications of hunger in our society. The implications go far beyond the pain of the hunger. Those who suffer from hunger all too often develop health problems as a result, adding to their suffering and to the societal costs of this tragedy. For young people working to get an education, hunger has a severe detrimental impact. The ultimate result is, of course, lost productivity and economic success for the individual and the society.

Clearly, hunger is a problem not only for those who suffer directly but also for the rest of our society. Many do not acknowledge that fact and have found it easier to turn their backs to this problem, as if it has no bearing on their own lives.

In fact, as recently as 1988, Westchester County did not have one food cupboard or soup kitchen to assist these people. There was not one place where a hungry person could count on finding sustenance, not one oasis of caring where a worried parent could count on finding food for a hungry child.

Food-PATCH was organized to bring together concerned citizens to respond to this urgent need. In a very short time over 100 soup kitchens have been established in the northern half of Westchester County. Every day, 10,000 pounds of food are distributed to those who would otherwise go hungry. Through the efforts of Food-PATCH, thousands of children do not have to go to bed hungry; parents are able to feed themselves and know that their children are receiving essential nutrition.

In spite of the immense challenge of tackling the hunger problem in our county, Food-PATCH is undertaking an energetic program toward even more ambitious goals. They provide classes in practical living to help people become self-sufficient, to supplement the quality of the food they distribute with nutritious fruit and vegetables, to fight for breakfast programs in public schools, and to provide infant's and children's survival kits to parents.

I salute Food-PATCH, Mr. Speaker, for having the compassion to care, the energy to work, the perseverance to ensure the resources are there to meet the massive need, and the foresight to look beyond today. The result of their commitment has been a remarkable ability to make a difference in the lives of others. Every person who is involved with this organization deserves the appreciation of the entire Westchester community for their selfless support for Food-PATCH and its important work.

Those of us in the Congress have a responsibility to groups like Food-PATCH. As we set budgetary priorities and craft legislation designed to address the hunger problem in America, we need to ensure that our work complements and enhances the ability of Food-PATCH and other humanitarian organizations to continue their valuable work. We should never forget that, without them, the Federal efforts to address this problem would not succeed.

I am sure that all of my colleagues here in the House join me in acknowledging our debt of gratitude to the people who give of their time and financial resources to make Food-PATCH the success it is.

VETERANS DAY 1991 IS A VERY SPECIAL OCCASION

HON. JAMES T. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, for the first time in decades our country finds itself ready to celebrate Veterans Day without the cold war staring us in the face. The world has changed drastically, although many serious problems remain. But our military personnel find themselves quietly defending the peace at the present time.

Veterans Day 1991 remains a very special occasion. We honor the brave men and women in our military forces, both past and present, who serve their country with such great distinction. I remind all my fellow Americans to take a moment to remember especially those veterans who have given the ultimate sacrifice in the defense of freedom. In this century alone we have seen two major world wars and countless other confrontations between nations. Any day you visit either a veterans cemetery or VA hospital, you are clearly reminded of the horrors of war. Yet at the same time I encourage the citizens of this Nation to take a moment to visit a veterans hospital to offer support to those confined there.

The tremendous success of the Desert Storm operation showed the skill of our Armed Forces. They are second to none in the world, yet all of us hope no further battles in the name of peace will be necessary.

We have a great deal to be thankful for on Veterans Day 1991. I support all of our Armed Forces personnel, past and present, and extend to them the congratulations of a grateful nation.

TRIBUTE TO THE D.C. INSTITUTE FOR MENTAL HEALTH

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to extend to the D.C. Institute for Mental Health my heartfelt congratulations for 25 years of mental health service to the citizens of the District of Columbia. For 25 years, the Institute for Mental Health has operated 5 community-based programs—Anacostia Clinic, the Center for Family Health, Connecticut Avenue Clinic, Georgia Avenue Clinic, and the Institutewide Training Program.

Mr. Speaker, between July 1991 and June 1992, the Institute will see nearly 3,000 patients at 4 program sites, and it will provide them with some 150,000 hours of health care services. The institute is the largest and one of the oldest nonprofit providers of primary mental health care in the city—and the largest provider of such care for poor children. Among the institute's clients are the working poor, with nearly 40 percent in this group uninsured or underinsured. In the main, the institute's client population exhibits problems ranging from acute depression and suicidal behavior to stress-related disorders, phobias, and schizophrenia—with health as well as substance abuse problems commonly seen as complicating factors.

Mr. Speaker, with successful outpatient treatment, many of the institute's clients remain at work and productive in the community or move from public assistance to educational achievement, greater levels of productivity, and the maximum levels of self-sufficiency. As a result of the institute's work, severely disturbed patients who would require admission and costly treatment in inpatient psychiatric units remain in the community at a fraction of the public cost. Without the institute, the sheer number of patients needing emergency care would inundate the psychiatric and medical emergency rooms in the metropolitan area; significant numbers of patients would place overwhelming demands on the area's strained mental health and health care system; and many persons only marginally coping with their lives would become homeless.

Mr. Speaker, once identified and enrolled in the program, drug-exposed infants will receive routine pediatric neurological and psychiatric evaluations, indepth therapies, and other extensive medical care for the first 5 years of their lives. Siblings ages 6 to 11 years old will likewise receive indepth attention in the Therapeutic Afterschool Program, which will provide individual and group psychotherapy, psychiatric and psychological evaluations, and medicative therapies.

Mr. Speaker, recovery from cocaine addiction is a long, hard-fought process. Residential treatments will be provided for the most seriously addicted parents, lasting anywhere from 6 to 18 months. In addition, the Institute will offer outpatient therapy groups for those mothers and fathers not requiring residential treatment. Other therapy groups will focus on assisting and encouraging pregnant women, many of whom are expected to be very young, to seek early pre-natal care and to eliminate the drug-taking behaviors which endanger unborn children.

Vocational training will be offered through collaborations with the local business community and schools. Day and evening drug and other education programs will teach parenting and other necessary life skills. A full range of psychiatric services will be available for this often dually diagnosed population.

Mr. Speaker, the D.C. Institute for Mental Health is an excellent nonprofit organization worthy of our notice on its 25th Anniversary.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO COMPENSATE VETERANS WHO HAVE BEEN HARMED BY DVA

HON. GEORGE J. HOCHBRUECKNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation that I believe will bring fairness to veterans who have been harmed by the Department of Veterans Affairs [DVA].

My bill will provide that amounts received by a veteran in a legal settlement with the DVA for injuries arising from the negligence of the Department shall not be counted as income for purposes of income-based programs administered by the DVA.

Mr. Speaker, as so often is the case, the inadequacies of current law are brought to our attention through constituent casework. The impetus for this bill came from one of my constituents, Mr. Richard Corbett, who was offered a $20,000 settlement for his injuries as a result of the DVA's negligence in providing him with improper medication. Mr. Corbett was informed that if he accepted this settlement for his injuries caused by the DVA he would no longer receive the income-based pension he and his family currently depend upon. Since the DVA includes personal damages as countable income, veterans benefits that are means tested, such as pensions, are offset by the amount of any injury award.

I believe that it is unfair for the DVA to benefit from the injuries it causes veterans. The veteran, after having his personal damages claim acknowledged by a settlement offer from the DVA, is not indemnified for the DVA's negligence. He is no better off having essentially won his claim than he would have been having lost. Where is the justice for this disabled veteran and his family who have been harmed by the DVA? I am certain that there are many other veterans who find themselves in similar circumstances.

I call my colleagues' attention to a precedent set with regard to personal damages as countable income and the offsetting of DVA means-tested benefits. In the past 3 years, Congress enacted two laws that excluded personal damages from being counted as income for the purpose of determining entitlement to Federal benefits. The first law precludes out-of-court settlement payments received by Vietnam veterans who were exposed to agent orange from being counted by the DVA for its income-based benefits. The second law prohibits all Federal agencies from counting as income any veteran's out-of-court settlement payments for agent orange exposure for all means-tested Federal benefits and programs. Both of these bills, which I introduced, received unanimous support and were expeditiously signed into law.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to give this important bill their support. I am certain that each one of us will be helping a veteran who has been hurt by the DVA. We should not allow them to be hurt twice. Let's approve legislation to allow these veterans to settle their legal claims and keep their pension benefits, when the DVA is the negligent party.

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I want to start by thanking Senator BUMPERS, Representatives MATSUI, GRADISON, and others and say that I enjoyed working with them in drafting this important piece of legislation.

For many years, I have been a leading and vocal critic in the Ways and Means Committee against the broad-based capital gains tax cut offered by the President and others.

I intend to remain so.

I have taken this position because I believe that such an approach creates windfall rewards for past investment decisions, disproportionately benefits the very wealthy, and encourages rapidly churning capital, creating paper wealth for stockbrokers.

What makes the Enterprise Capital Formation Act different is that our bill is a highly targeted capital gains tax cut designed to encourage new, long-term investments in small businesses that have been effectively shut out of traditional capital markets.

Indeed, the credit crunch has affected small businesses, particularly high-growth, risk-taking small businesses, most severely. We heard testimony in the Ways and Means Committee that venture capital funds fell from $4.2 billion in 1987 to $1.8 billion last year, and it will probably get worse in 1991.

These businesses are the engines of our economic growth in Wisconsin and the Nation. They create more jobs and are more innovative than their bigger counterparts.

A recent study by the Office for Technology Assessment [OTA] cited a lack of capital as a primary threat to the competitiveness of U.S. innovation in the future. While that study was specifically about biotechnology, the same could be said of electronics, process technologies, software development and other technologies specified by the President's own National Critical Technologies Panel as crucial to our economic growth.

American basic scientific research is the best in the world. Yet, when it comes to commercializing technologies, no American firm or bank can afford to invest. The payback takes too long, even when capital is available. So, reluctantly, many turn to Japanese, Germans, and others with more venture capital and investors who are willing to wait for their returns.

This silent technological drain is unnecessary. By making corporations as well as individuals eligible, our bill creates new pools of American capital that can help keep our best ideas at home, contributing to U.S. economic competitiveness and U.S. standard of living.

Democrats have long been identified with economic fairness. The Enterprise Capital Formation Act illustrates our willingness to work in a bipartisan way to achieve economic growth whose benefits are shared widely among all parts of society.

BIRMINGHAM PEDIATRICIAN LEAVES LEGACY FOR CHILDREN

HON. BEN ERDREICH

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to extend my congratulations to Dr. Dewey A. White, who will be receiving the Alabama Family Alliance 1991 Friends of the Family Award. I'd also like to share with my colleagues the many professional, church and civic contributions Dr. White has made to our community, touching the lives of thousands of Jefferson County citizens.

Dr. White practiced pediatrics for 30 years in Birmingham, served as president on the staff of Children's Hospital and organized and served as head of the department of pediatrics at Baptist Medical Center Montclair. Dr. White was a physician at UAB Medical Center Student Health Center from 1973 to 1978, serving the last 10 years as medical director. He was a professor of pediatrics at UAB, and held numerous positions in the State medical association.

But Dr. White's contributions were not limited to his profession. He served in the Alabama Legislature as a member of the house and senate, and was a member of the board of directors for Young Life, the King's Ranch, and Youth for Christ.

He presently serves on the Alabama Commission of Environmental Management; Juvenile Justice Coordinating Council, and is executive director of the King's Ranch.

Dr. White is the father of four children and nine grandchildren. His tireless efforts on behalf of all children is indeed a very special legacy that will be remembered by future generations. And, on a personal note, I sincerely appreciate and will always remember the many times Dr. White stitched up my son, Jeremy.

40TH ANNIVERSARY TRIBUTE TO SANTA CLAUS, INC.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention the fine work and outstanding public service of Santa Claus, Inc., a very special organization in San Bernardino, CA. During this holiday season, Santa Claus, Inc., will celebrate 40 years of bringing Christmas cheer to thousands of needy children and families in southern California.

Santa Claus, Inc., has its roots in World War II when Mrs. Mignon Schweitzer, a beautiful lady now in her eighties, joined with her friends on the social planning council in seeing a need to bring entertainment and some special holiday festivities to the airmen stationed at what is now Norton Air Force Base. The program was a success and deemed important to continue.

In 1951, Mignon Schweitzer founded Santa Claus, Inc., to concentrate solely on Christmas. "Incorporated" was added to signify incorporating the efforts of the entire community. The group acquired the use of garages, porches, and spare storage to store clothing and toys for the less fortunate families in the area. According to Mrs. Schweitzer, "Santa Claus has never considered itself a charity. Families that are less fortunate often are only temporarily so." A recent example are the many military families from Norton Air Force Base who were served last Christmas during the Persian Gulf war.

Some have suggested that it is unusual that Mignon Schweitzer, a woman of Jewish faith, would become so closely involved with Christmas. In an interview several years ago, she explained, "My grandfather was German and he always celebrated Christmas. It was a family gathering that came to mean so much to me."

Children and families in need come to the attention of Santa Claus, Inc., through referrals from schools, hospitals, churches, social workers, Red Cross, Salvation Army, and neighbors. Parents are sent invitations and appointments are set for them to shop at no cost for their children's Christmas presents. Mignon's wish has always been that parents be able to preserve their self-esteem and not suffer embarrassment because of their inability to provide for their children.

The organization Mignon founded 40 years ago provided toys and clothing for 1,000 children in its first year. During the last year, Santa Claus, Inc., served 9,078 children, including toys to 374 Norton Air Force Base families. Over the years, more than 250,000 children have been given positive memories of Christmas and the holiday season because of this wonderful organization.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me and our colleagues in recognizing the many valuable contributions Mignon Schweitzer and Santa Claus, Inc., have made over the years. This organization dedicated to giving is most worthy of recognition by the House today.

TRIBUTE TO JUDGE LUIGI R. MARANO

HON. SUSAN MOLINARI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, in the Bay Ridge community of Brooklyn on November 15, 1991, a very special event will take place. There will be a reception in honor of acting supreme court justice Luigi R. Marano, who will be retiring from the bench on December 31, 1991.

Judge Marano has been active and devoted in civil service all of his life, from his days as an assistant attorney general for the State of New York, to his service as a member of the New York State Assembly, and his appointments and reappointments as judge of the Family Court of New York and judge of the New York State Court of Claims.

In addition, Judge Marano has been active in the Bay Ridge community. He has taken on leadership roles in community organizations that best serve the interests of Bay Ridge.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the citizens of New York I would like to thank Judge Luigi Marano for his dedication and service. New York is losing a valuable civil servant, but we are all the better for his long and active career.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LIBERTY CITY QUARTET

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to the Liberty City Quartet, a group of four young women—Deithrea Smith, Melissa Spencer, Electra Ford, and Hope Walker—who perform in their string quartet. Three of the members have been friends and playing together since they attended Liberty School Elementary. Now seniors in college, they have quite a positive enterprise going. In a Miami Herald article Ricardo Bascuas reports "Quartet Won't Forget Roots," and I commend the following article to my colleagues:

> When Joe Tonna, manager of a Miami Beach restaurant, was looking for local talent to entertain his clientele, he called the University of Miami. The School of Music put him in touch with the Liberty City String Quartet.
> "I wanted to keep the music real simple but good and the Liberty City quartet fits the bill. They're straight-forward, they're classically studied students and they fit the place great," Tonna said.
>
> The quartet's members began playing their instruments at Liberty City Elementary, 1855 NW 71st St., under the direction of music teacher Charles Mobley. Now seniors in college, three original members of the group, Deithrea Smith, Melissa Spencer and Electra Ford still play together with Hope Walker, who replaced a member who went away to school.
>
> "They wanted to pursue this beyond their Dade County Public School tenure," said Mobley. "They have been friends and colleagues since their elementary school days and it just sort of evolved."
>
> Once they all graduated from Northwestern High, they began managing the quartet themselves instead of relying on their instructors.
>
> "When Melissa graduated in 1987, we decided to get serious. We set our own price range, we got business cards," said Ford, 21.
>
> They now have a manager, Morgan Harris, to market their talent. Besides appearing at Key East Restaurant, 647 Lincoln Rd., the group plays at wedding receptions and banquets.
>
> "Quite frankly speaking, you don't have many black groups that are really interested in playing string instruments," said Harris. "This kind of group can be a rare commodity."
>
> "That is the reason the women named the group after the city where they grew up.
>
> "Everything you hear on TV about Liberty City is so negative. We just wanted to portray the positive side of it," said Smith, 21. "We're not going to forget Liberty City no matter if our careers and our education take us someplace else. This will always be our base."
>
> Spencer, 22, and Ford are both on scholarship at UM. Ford, a music performance major, has a full tuition scholarship while Spencer, majoring in music education, received two partial scholarships. Spencer plays the viola and Ford plays the cello.
>
> Smith, a business management major at Barry University, and Walker, a 19-year-old sophomore at the South Campus of Miami-Dade Community College, both play the violin. Smith received a Golden Drum scholarship and Walker, a music education major, received a full-tuition fine arts grant from MDCC.

I would like to recognize the outstanding accomplishments of these four, young artists Deithrea Smith, Melissa Spencer, Electra Ford, and Hope Walker.

FATAL FLAW IN NEW BANKING BILL EXPOSES TAXPAYERS TO TENS OF BILLIONS IN RISK

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, while there is much in the new banking bill (H.R. 2094) that is worthwhile, I am concerned that it does not include many important sections of the original H.R. 6 which were considered noncontroversial, and that it contains one fatal flaw.

Members should be aware that, as currently drafted the new banking bill explicitly exposes U.S. taxpayers to tens of billions of dollars of risk. It authorizes the Federal Reserve and Secretary of the Treasury to spend tens of billions of dollars to payoff uninsured deposits, even if those deposits are outside the United States.

To put this in perspective, if section 142(b)(2) of the bill is not changed, unelected bureaucrats could, in one fell swoop, spend more money than either the Commerce Department, the Energy Department, the Interior Department, the Justice Department, the State Department, the EPA, NASA, or the entire legislative or judicial branches spend in an entire year.

This loophole must be closed before we pass this legislation. I will seek permission from the Rules Committee to offer such an amendment on the House floor. No amendments were permitted in the Banking Committee because the previous question was moved before any amendments could be offered.

Section 142(b)(2) of the bill purports to close the infamous too-big-to-fail loophole. Unfortunately, it contains a loophole large enough to drain the U.S. Treasury.

Section 142(b)(2) of this legislation adds a new subsection (b)(5) Permissible advances to avoid systemic risk to section 10B of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 347b). This loosely defined subsection constitutes an open-ended draw on the U.S. Treasury.

This subsection authorizes the Federal Reserve, in conjunction with the Secretary of the Treasury, to make advances to an undercapitalized depository institution if the advances, are necessary to prevent a severe adverse effect on a regional or the national economy. Nowhere does it define either severe adverse affect or regional economy.

Some have said we should not worry about these advances because they are made by the Federal Reserve, and not the FDIC or the Treasury. Members should be aware that the only reason the Federal Reserve runs a profit is because reserve requirements imposed by Federal law guarantee the Federal Reserve a steady income stream of billions of dollars. Thus the Federal Reserves' profits are guaranteed by law and profits in excess of expenditures are turned over to the U.S. Treasury. If the Federal Reserve starts bailing-out uninsured and foreign deposits those costs will reduce income to the Treasury and will raise both the deficit and the national debt.

Furthermore, new subsection (5)(B) explicitly states that costs in excess of liquidation—i.e., the bailout of uninsured deposits and foreign deposits—shall be an obligation of the United States. A number of our too-big-to-fail banks have tens of billions of dollars of such deposits.

By leaving this loophole in the law we perpetuate the too-big-to-fail doctrine and continue the drain on small- and medium-sized financial institutions.

Ideally, we should strip new subsection (5)(B) from this bill. At an absolute minimum we should: First, require that the President, not the Secretary of the Treasury, make any bailout decision that could cost U.S. taxpayers tens of billions of dollars, and second, permit such bailouts only when there is systemic risk to the national economy.

It would be a serious mistake for us to continue to leave the too-big-to-fail loophole open, hemorrhaging funds from small- and medium-sized financial institutions to undercapitalized money center banks. It would be tragic to open the doors to the U.S. Treasury, at great potential risk to U.S. taxpayers, upon the decision of unelected officials at the Treasury and the Federal Reserve.

The Federal Government is neither legally nor morally obligated to cover uninsured or foreign deposits. We should not give that power to unelected bureaucrats now when that will disrupt the flow of credit in the United States, and will expose the Treasury and U.S. taxpayers to tens of billions of unwarranted costs.

IN MEMORIAM: SCOTT ANDERSON

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with much sadness that I note the passing of my good friend, Scott Anderson. For many years, Scott was the chief lobbyist for the Burlington Northern Railroad. It was in this capacity that I first met Scott shortly after I was elected to Congress 7 years ago.

Scott helped me in many ways. My campaign had a six-figure debt and Scott helped me retire it. That is not an unusual story. Every lobbyist wants to get close to an incumbent. Scott, however, offered much more. He gave me good advice about this town. He helped me to achieve a perspective about my new job that allowed me not to take myself or Capitol Hill too seriously. Scott's wisdom was invaluable then, and it has stayed with me ever since.

Mr. Speaker, many of our colleagues will remember Scott for his political acumen, his wonderful sense of humor, and his ever-present suspenders and hearty laugh. We were all fortunate to know him because he brought a balance to this town that is desperately needed. I know my colleagues join me in sending our condolences to his wife, Rosemary, his daughters, Heather and Heidi, and the remainder of his family. Scott's friends on Capitol Hill mourn his loss because he was such a joy to know and work with. This institution needs more lobbyists like Scott Anderson.

TRIBUTE TO MARY STANDLEE

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a truly special individual who has contributed significantly to education in California and across the Nation. Mary Standlee has served the past year as president of the California School Boards Association and is concluding her term in December. During her tenure as president and as a leader in education, Ms. Standlee has brought innovative ideas and thoughtful debate to the education community. Her stature as a distinguished authority in education has become unquestioned through her demonstrated leadership as an educator and articulate spokesperson on behalf of children.

Ms. Standlee has demonstrated a lifelong commitment to youth. She has taught school in California and Alaska and involved herself deeply in education issues for more than 20 years. Ms. Standlee has been directly responsible for the tremendous professional growth of the association in the areas of governmental relations, communications, research, board development, policy development, and field services. Her personal efforts to focus attention on specific education issues including at-risk children, early intervention, and instruction to limited-English-proficient students clearly indicate her compassion and concern for kids.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all my colleagues and all Americans who value a high quality of education for our Nation's children, I pay honor to the tireless efforts of Ms. Mary Standlee as she leaves the presidency of the California School Boards Association. It is with great pride and enthusiasm that we thank her for the lasting contributions she has already provided us and those accomplishments we can expect from her in the future.

ON THE OCCASION OF THE LAST NATIONAL REUNION OF THE VETERANS OF THE 108TH INFANTRY REGIMENT

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, on November 16, 1991, the 108th Infantry of the 27th Division of the old New York National Guard will celebrate the 51st anniversary of its Federal muster of October 15, 1940. The gathering will also be a time for the veterans of the regiment to commemorate the 50th anniversary of Pearl Harbor which occurred on December 7, 1941, when the 108th was on active duty at Fort McClellan, AL.

The 108th Infantry, as part of the 27th Division, was the first infantry regiment from the State of Alabama to be sent overseas in February 1942. The 27th Division and the 108th Infantry Regiment were assigned to defend the territory of Hawaii, and the 108th took up defensive positions on the Islands of Maui, Lanai, and Molokai.

In September 1942, the regiment prepared and trained for jungle warfare and was assigned to the 40th Division of the California National Guard. The 108th served with distinction and honor in Hawaii, Guadalcanal, New Britain, Luzon, and in the liberation of the Philippines.

For its distinguished service in World War I, as a part of the 27th Division, the 108th was decorated with campaign streamers for the Somme Offensive, Ypres, and Flanders. The campaign streamers for World War II include Bismarck Archipelago, Leyte, Luzon, and the southern Philippines with Arrowhead.

The mayor of the city of Rochester, NY, Thomas P. Ryan, has proclaimed November 15–17, 1991, as 108th Infantry Days in honor of the regiment's faithful service to our country. And the State of Alabama, where Fort McClellan is located at Anniston, is host to the permanent monument to the 27th Division, including the 108th Infantry which was reassigned to the division at the end of World War II.

Mr. Speaker, I am extremely proud to be an honorary life member of the 108th Infantry Association. Other honorary life members include: Our former colleague, Bill Nichols, who represented the 3rd District of Alabama, the site of Fort McClellan; my fellow Rochesterian, good friend and colleague, Louise Slaughter, who represents New York's 30th District, the home base of the 108th Infantry Association; my colleague from Alabama, Congressman Glen Browder, and Guy Hunt, the Governor of the State of Alabama.

On behalf of all of us, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend all of the members of the 108th, especially the officers of the 108th Infantry Association: Mr. Joe Taddeo, Sr., president; Mr. Nick Meli, vice president; and Mr. Archie Rinebold, special events chairman. Also, special recognition is in order for Mr. James Noblitt, who serves as the historian for the 108th Infantry Association. Mr. Noblitt served as medical assistant throughout the battle for the liberation of the Philippines and treated many of the injured and wounded members of the regiment.

On this memorable occasion, the members of the 108th Infantry Association salute their Commander in Chief, the Honorable George Bush, President of the United States of America, and wish the Members of the Congress good health and guidance in the performance of their services to our country. And Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in expressing their gratitude and admiration for the brave soldiers of the 108th Infantry.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MARIAN AND FRANK ROCHE

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, the coming weeks provide cause for special celebration for Marian and Frank Roche of Waverly, PA, and their family and friends. Mr. and Mrs. Roche will be celebrating both their 60th wedding anniversary and their 80th birthdays.

Marian and Frank were born on December 15 and November 15, 1911, respectively, and have been lifelong residents of the Dunmore-Scranton area. They were kindergarteners together in Dunmore, and eloped and were married at St. Theresa's Catholic Church in Wilkes-Barre on November 26, 1931. Sixty years later they are blessed with 5 children, 20 grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren.

Frank retired in 1972 from a rewarding career with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. after attaining the position of regional manager. Mr. and Mrs. Roche have been longtime activists in community, church, civic, and charitable activities in northeastern Pennsylvania. I am sure that their proudest achievements are the health and successes of their children and grandchildren.

The Roche's lives personify the traditional American values of commitment to each other, love of family, success earned through hard work, and selfless service to others that have made this country great. Mr. and Mrs. Roche are to be congratulated as their family and friends gather in Scranton later this month to celebrate these significant milestones in their lives.

TRIBUTE TO COL. JERRY D. WOODS, U.S. AIR FORCE

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a friend, a warrior and a true American hero, Col. Jerry D. Woods, who retired on September 1, 1991, from the U.S. Air Force after 24 years of diligent service to our country, most recently as the chief of the Air Force House Liaison Office.

Colonel Woods has served this country with great distinction as both an officer and fighter pilot. He has flown 281 combat missions and has received the Distinguished Flying Cross as well as 11 Air Medals. Overall, Colonel Woods has logged over 4,000 flight hours in various jet fighter aircraft including both the Air Force and Navy F–4 Phantom, the F–5 aggressor aircraft, and the F–16 Fighting Falcon.

He has served as an instructor pilot at Luke Air Force Base, where he was named Instructor Pilot of the Year in 1975. Colonel Woods also served as an exchange pilot with the U.S. Navy, where he completed 257 carrier landings, including 91 at night. He even received the prestigious Carrier Top Gun Award while in service with the Navy in 1979.

While Colonel Woods has an extensive background in the cockpit of numerous jet fighter aircraft, those of us in the House of Representatives know him best from his most recent position as chief of the Air Force Liaison Office. In this position, Colonel Woods has been a direct representative to Members of Congress for the Air Force, Secretary of Defense Cheney, and President Bush. I can think of no one who has provided better guidance, advice and real world expertise on a wide variety of aerospace and other national security issues than Colonel Woods has provided to this body over the past 2 years.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in saluting Colonel Woods for his many contributions to the security of this great Nation. It is worth great pride and pleasure that I congratulate him upon his retirement from the Air Force, and I extend my best wishes to Jerry for all of his future endeavors.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO COMMEMORATE THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF WORLD WAR II

HON. JOHN T. MYERS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation to commemorate the 50th anniversary of World War II. There are over 9 million living veterans of World War II in the United States and during the 4-year period from 1991 to 1995, I believe it is important to honor the men and women who defended our country so bravely just 50 years ago.

This bill calls for a national observance of the 50th anniversary of World War II which lends support to those men and women across America who are holding reunions, conferences, and special events to remember an important time ingrained in our country's past.

War is not a cause for celebration and this resolution does not celebrate World War II or any war. This legislation commemorates the U.S. involvement in the war and serves to recognize the people who fought for freedom. There are many stories about our Nation's involvement in the war and these stories should be retold, especially to the younger generations, who only know about World War II from their history books and their parents and grandparents.

By designating the week of May 31 through June 6, 1992 as a week for the "National Observance of the 50th Anniversary of World War II," we recognize and pay homage to millions of Americans who made great sacrifice for the benefit of all America.

I invite all Members to join me in recognizing World War II veterans by cosponsoring this commemorative legislation.

UNIVERSAL HEALTH CARE

HON. BERNARD J. DWYER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues an issue that is important to myself, my constituents, and the Nation. That issue is national health care reform. On November 5, 80 percent of New Jersey voters supported a ballot question urging the Congress to enact national health care for everyone. My colleagues will also be interested to know that supporters would be willing to share the cost either through a copayment or deductible.

There has been a great deal of concern in recent years over the high cost of health care, and whether attempts to control costs have resulted in a reduced level of quality in our health care. These are concerns that I have been working on throughout my tenure in Congress.

However, past efforts are not enough. Now is the time to review the health care system in America. There are many proposals circulating this Congress. A step in the right direction would be consideration of H.R. 1300, the Universal Health Care Act. As its name implies, this legislation would provide coverage to all Americans regardless of job, income, and age.

I believe that now is the time for the Congress to act on reforming the health care system. The people of New Jersey demand it as does the whole country.

MAYOR TED MANN LEADS RECYCLING EFFORT

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of talk about recycling in recent years. In some cases there has been decisive action in this regard—and I am very proud that my home city of Newton, MA, is one of those in which such action is taking place.

The major share of the credit for this goes to our mayor, Ted Mann. Newton has had this program in existence in some form for 20 years, and it is no coincidence that is also the length of time that Ted Mann has been the mayor. He is not only the senior mayor in point of service in our State; he is, by general agreement, as dynamic and creative a chief executive as we have in Massachusetts. Obviously this program succeeds because of the enthusiastic cooperation it receives from so many citizens of Newton, and from the city's able municipal work force. But the key to it all is Mayor Mann and his talented enthusiasm.

I was very pleased that City & State magazine in its October 7 issue recognized both the importance of Newton's program and the central role Ted Mann has played in it. This is truly an example for the rest of the Nation and I ask that the article be reprinted here so that others can benefit from this example.

[From City & State, Oct. 7, 1991]

NEWTON: A HISTORY OF "THINKING GREEN"—VISIONARY MAYOR NURTURES PROGRAM

(By Amy Lamphere)

Over the last few years, the United States has witnessed a turnaround in attitudes toward wasting, using and recycling.

In the early 1980s, most recycling programs existed only on drawing boards, and citizens who were "thinking green" virtually were considered radicals. By 1990, recycling suddenly was "in" for the majority of the populace.

Given that history, how is it that recycling in Newton, Mass., a medium-size city just outside of Boston, has been in existence since 1971?

Credit goes to one visionary, Theodore D. Mann, who was elected mayor in 1971 and immediately began implementing a plan to create a recycling program. Mr. Mann, who remains Newton's mayor today, had formulated a recycling program during his earlier days as an alderman.

"Mayor Mann has been the driving force behind all of the environmental programs in the city," explained James L. Hickey, Newton's public works commissioner. "Water conservation, tree planting, composting, recycling * * *. He's the one who gives us an environmental push. Twenty years ago Newton started this program. That's a lot of foresight."

Mr. Hickey noted that Newton was the first city in Massachusetts to commence weekly curbside recycling. Now, he added, that program is the state's most comprehensive.

Mr. Mann said his enthusiasm for environmental programs was the result of a series of observations in the community and around the world.

"I took note of what was happening to the environment," Mr. Mann said. "Land space was becoming scarce and stories of pollution from incinerators were beginning to filter through. I knew something had to happen."

Mr. Mann's commitment to working with the environment has heightened over the years. He has visited countless cities to examine resource recovery programs.

"We are being emulated in many countries throughout the world," he said. "What started locally has gone global."

Newton's two-decades-old program started simply with a recycling drop-off center. Residents were encouraged to bring newspaper, cans and glass to the center on a voluntary basis. Less than a year later, the mayor created the Citizens Recycling Committee, an ad hoc advisory group of citizens.

Early in 1972, the recycling program in Newton launched bimonthly curbside newspaper collections. The program has since experienced a multitude of changes.

Newton's recycling program has been developed gradually, with expansions coming piece by piece. The first expansion came in 1975, when glass and cans were added to the curbside effort. The next big change arrived in 1980, when an initiative spearheaded by Mr. Mann to mandate the recycling of newspaper was passed by the Newton Board of Aldermen.

The switch to mandatory from voluntary recycling was a success. The tonnage of collected newspaper increased 66% during the first year of mandatory recycling to 2,792 tons in 1981 from 1,683 tons in 1980.

Newton privatized its waste collection and recycling programs in 1983. In April last year, the city negotiated a five-year, fixed-price contract with Laidlaw Waste Systems Inc. for collection of material with a waste hauler, waiving the returns from the sale of recyclables in exchange for avoiding the uncertainties of recycling markets.

The estimated cost of the recycling and yard waste projects for fiscal 1992 is $750,000 City officials say that amount represents a cost savings of $600,000 when compared to past disposal methods.

During the mid 1980s, it became apparent that a composting plan for yard waste was essential. Although one had been instituted in the 1970s, it had been largely unsuccessful.

The mayor's push for composting can be attributed to his knowledge of similar programs in Japan, where he found that "composting is a way of life."

The city adopted the state's first major municipal composting program, according to Mr. Hickey, and the program's success seems to be contagious. In December, the state will begin enforcing a ban on leaf disposal in landfills and incinerators.

"Composting is an integral part of recycling," said Mr. Hickey. "There was a tremendous amount of yard waste being deposited in the landfill."

In the 82,000-resident community, nicknamed the "Garden City," yard waste is not small potatoes. The city boasts 350,000 trees, 30,000 of which line public streets. Yard waste is a large portion—between 18% and 20%—of Newton's residential waste stream.

The composting plan has flourished. Although some residents have taken the initiative to compost at home, the majority of recycled yard waste is picked up during curbside collection. Last year, 8,000 tons of yard waste were composted by the city.

Newton also has provided a market for its own compost. By mixing the material with road sand swept up at the end of winter and clay recycled from road construction jobs, the city creates loam for city landscaping projects. Any remaining loam is given to Newton residents free of charge.

"We are able to save money and put valuable natural resources to use in our own city," boasted Mr. Hickey.

Yet with all of its success, Newton hasn't finished developing its recycling program. The fastest growing area in the program is the drop-off center. In particular, the flow of office paper, cardboard, telephone books and magazines is increasing.

"We're constantly looking at new ways to expand." Mr. Hickey said.

CONGRATULATIONS JAMIE WHITTEN; YOU ARE A GREAT MEMBER OF THE HOUSE

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, November 5, 1991, the House of Representatives celebrated a very important day—the 50th anniversary of Congressman JAMIE WHITTEN's entry into Congress. Two months from now, Chairman WHITTEN will break the all-time record for continuous service in the House of Representatives.

This remarkable longevity is testimony to the esteem and admiration that the First District of Mississippi has held for their Representative over the past 50 years.

First elected in 1941, a month before the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, JAMIE WHITTEN has chaired the Rural Development and Agriculture Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee since 1949, with a special eye toward serving his agriculturally based corner of Mississippi.

Mr. Speaker, JAMIE WHITTEN'S success in representing Mississippi is indicated by his 25 consecutive election victories, and his success at gaining the esteem of his colleagues is illustrated by his ascendance to the chairmanship of the full Appropriations Committee in 1978. Over the years, he has remained one of the most important, and indeed, influential members of this body, respected for his sound judgment, experience, and especially his fairness.

Mr. Speaker, JAMIE WHITTEN has devoted all of his adult life to public service. Reared in a farming family, he was elected to the Mississippi House at age 21 and became district attorney just 2 years later. At age 31, he was elected to Congress on the eve of World War II. He served through the end of the Great Depression, World War II, the Vietnam war, the civil rights movement, Watergate, and most recently the gulf war. He has been a Member of Congress under 10 Presidents. He has changed with the times, but he is also testimony to the virtues of perseverance and dedication.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have served in this body with JAMIE WHITTEN, and I congratulate him on his 50 years as a Member of Congress.

A TRIBUTE TO WARREN COUNTY, MS, SHERIFF PAUL BARRETT

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. ESPY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to give tribute to Sheriff Paul Barrett who has served Warren County, MS, for 24 years. Yesterday, Sheriff Barrett made Mississippi history by becoming the first sheriff in the State to be elected for seven terms. His six previous terms of solid law enforcement and unselfish service are undoubtedly highly recognized by the residents throughout Warren County.

Paul Barrett first entered law enforcement on October 4, 1952, when he joined the Vicksburg Police Department. While on the Vicksburg force, his hard work and dedication quickly advanced him to rank of chief of detectives, where his skills as a law enforcement officer where highly valued.

After losing his first attempt at the sheriff's post in 1963, Paul Barrett was first elected sheriff in 1967. He has beaten opponents in his previous six elections, but on Tuesday he happily ran unopposed.

Since that first election, he has worked to serve all the residents of Warren County—both black and white. His dedication to fair, yet stern police work, has helped him gain great respect.

Throughout Warren County, Sheriff Barrett is known for his many Good Samaritan acts. He once bought presents for five children for Christmas. Their father couldn't—because he was serving time in Sheriff Barrett's jail. At another time, Sheriff Barrett helped the widow of a grocery store owner who was murdered during a robbery. Sheriff Barrett helped the widow get a safety deposit box and helped her with funeral arrangements. In yet another incident, Sheriff Barrett bought shoes for a young girl so she could go to school. Many years later, that same young girl passed on a lifesaving tip to the sheriff. She helped him catch suspects plotting to take his life. It's just that kind of close relationship with Warren County residents that has helped Sheriff Barrett to inspire the community to work together. Consistently, Sheriff Barrett goes far beyond the call of duty, and Warren County residents consistently recognize his hard work.

Mr. Speaker, I have known Sheriff Barrett, who is the father of one son and grandfather of three grandchildren, for several years. He and his wife, Juanita Boutwell Barrett know their community well and serve it well. Sheriff Barrett's reelection to his seventh term on November 5, 1991, is testament to his distinguished public service.

ESTABLISHING NATIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR DAY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation designating March 25 of each year as National Medal of Honor Day.

The Congressional Medal of Honor is the highest distinction that any member of our Armed Forces can earn. Last year many of my colleagues joined me in cosponsoring a resolution designating March 25, 1991 as National Medal of Honor Day. The positive response was overwhelming and that resolution was signed into law. It is the intent of the bill I am introducing today to give National Medal of Honor Day a permanent place on our calendars.

President Abraham Lincoln, in the name of Congress, issued the first Medal of Honor on March 25, 1863. Since that time, millions of brave men and women have served our country but only 3,412 have earned this medal. It is in this spirit of selfless sacrifice and caring for others that I believe it only fitting to set aside one day, March 25, of each year to honor and remember these great Americans.

In recent years, we've learned that young Americans have little understanding of the Medal of Honor. Last year, the Wall Street Journal reported on a survey concerning the Medal of Honor. Out of the 1,500 students surveyed, 50 percent believed the medal was an entertainment award, while only 5 percent knew what the medal really represented. We must correct this lack of understanding.

This bill seeks to raise public awareness of the Medal of Honor and its recipients. These brave individuals who have given so much to our country must never be forgotten. It is important that they remain in the forefront of our thoughts. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this legislation I have introduced today designating March 25 of each year, National Medal of Honor Day.

VETERANS DAY

HON. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to remember those joyous moments not so long ago, when we knew that Operation Desert Storm was over, and that our friends and loved ones serving in the Armed Forces would soon be coming home. From Saudi Arabia to Iraq, from Griffis Air Force Base in Rome, NY, to Rheien-Main in Frankfurt, Germany, those fine men and women served their Nation with incredible courage and bravery, with unmatched tenacity and valor. I salute them today for their unending patriotism, for the many sacrifices they made, and for their willingness to go beyond the call of duty.

But, I salute them for another reason, as well. Today, I applaud those airmen, soldiers, marines, and sailors, because many have now become members of a very select and very esteemed group—they are veterans. With songs and parades, marches and speeches, they will be remembered on Veterans Day. Yet, as we reflect upon the service which these new veterans rendered recently for freedom's sake, let us reflect, too, upon the invaluable service which has been provided by all our Nation's veterans. From Gettysburg to Saigon, from Fort Stanwix and Oriskany to Normandy and Iwo Jima, the veterans of this great land have given us something for which we can never fully repay. They have given us their strength. They have given us our freedom.

The fact that America stands today as a beacon of hope and democracy throughout the world is proof that no one has died in vain. It is up to us to make certain that veterans know of the unending appreciation we feel in our hearts for all their service and all their sacrifices. Let us make this November 11 a day when every veteran feels the deepest respect, admiration, and gratitude from the countrymen he or she so nobly and valiantly fought to defend.

KAREN A. GIEVERS, DADE COUNTY BAR ASSOCIATION'S NEW PRESIDENT

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Karen A. Gievers, who was featured in the Miami Herald after being installed as the president-elect of the Dade County Bar Association. The article "President-Elect of Dade Bar Likes View From Top of Ladder" by Charles B. Rabin tells about how she worked her way up the ladder to become president of this prestigious organization:

This past June, Karen A. Gievers was installed as president-elect of the Dade County Bar Association. It's something she's been shooting for for quite some time.

"I've been working my way up the ladder for the last 4½ years," she said. "It's always nice to move up to the next step."

Her term will begin in June 1992.

"She'll be an excellent president. There are very few people in America who care about curing problems like she does," said current President Dean Colson, of Colson Hicks Eidson Colson and Matthews in Miami.

Gievers maintains an office with associate Nancy La Vista at 44 W. Flagler St. in Miami. The two primarily practice personal injury law, but she likes to refer to herself as a trial lawyer.

The specialty has suffered an image problem, Gievers acknowledges, no thanks to some late-night television ads that make the attorneys seem a bit overzealous. It's a bad rap on some reputable lawyers, she said.

"You can use commercials to help educate people instead of using them for attorney selection," Gievers said.

In 1987, Gievers formed a nonprofit organization called Operation SafeDrive. Its creation was due in part to her work with accident victims but mainly because of her husband's death. Joe Gievers was struck by a car and killed while riding a bicycle. A teenage driver had taken his eyes off the road to change the radio station.

"I formed the organization to help remind the driving public of paying attention and to help judges be aware of changed laws," Gievers said.

She lobbies the Florida Legislature on behalf of the Academy of Florida Trial Lawyers, the Dade County Bar Association, the Dade County Trial Lawyers Association and Operation SafeDrive. She also serves the Academy of Florida Trial Lawyers as president.

"Where necessary, she'll work like hell to change the system," Colson said. "She's a very formidable foe if she feels something needs to be changed."

Her respect for those on the other side of the fence has deepened, too.

"It's (lobbying) a tremendous process. I've been working at it for 7½ years," she said. "I've found that legislators work a lot harder than most people think.

"Sometimes it gets frustrating, because laws many times are changed because of political reasons, and not for common sense. But the democratic system of government is the best anyone's ever come up with."

The daughter of a housewife and businessman, Gievers is the first in her family to study law. "The generation I grew up in, girls were supposed to drop out and have kids. My parents don't know how to explain me."

After dropping out of UCLA in 1967 to get married, the Gieverses moved to Miami in 1969, when Joe found a job with National Airlines. Four years later, it was back to school for Karen. She attended Florida International University and Miami-Dade Community College as an undergraduate and graduated from the University of Miami Law School in 1976.

She landed her first job as a law clerk with Wolf & Schoninger. She left to join Sams Anderson Gerstein & Ward, becoming an associate in 1978. She then spent five years with Anderson & Moss, also as an associate, before becoming a partner with Anderson Moss Russo Gievers & Cohen.

By March 1987, it became Karen A. Gievers, P.A. She's the mother of a 21-year-old son at the University of Southern California and a 19-year-old daughter attending Tulane University.

She would maintain her South Florida residence. "I think it's a really fun place to work and live. People throughout the whole state care about it, and you can make a difference," she said. "There are so many different cultures, you see it in multi-ethnic juries. It's a microcosm of South Florida to watch a jury in action."

I am happy to pay tribute to Karen A. Gievers by reprinting this article from the Miami Herald. She has overcome many obstacles to achieve her goal, and is an inspiration to those who are still climbing the ladder to their dream.

VETERANS DAY 1991 HAS A SPECIAL SIGNIFICANCE

HON. H. MARTIN LANCASTER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues and millions of Americans as we prepare to formally celebrate Veterans Day, November 11. For 72 years, this Nation has recognized the contributions and sacrifices of our Nation's veterans to the cause of freedom that we all enjoy. While Veterans Day, initially known as Armistice Day, celebrated the ending of World War I at 11 a.m., November 11, 1918—the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month—this special day now celebrates all who have so fought and struggled in the wars of this Nation and those who serve every day in our Nation's Armed Forces in times of peace. We are a grateful Nation.

This year we have experienced war and the unsettled peace that follows. Our Nation united as one to support the fine men and women who fought in Desert Storm and also those who remained behind serving in our Nation's military at home. My congressional district in North Carolina proudly sent its finest out of Camp Lejeune Marine Corps Base and Seymour Johnson Air Force Base and Fort Bragg and from National Guard armories and Reserve centers across eastern North Carolina. All of our communities, large and small, supported the men and women in uniform and took the families of these men and women who served into their hearts and into their homes.

Veterans Day 1991 has a special significance. For the first time since the end of the Vietnam conflict, this Nation was involved in a war that millions of Americans experienced every day and night in their own homes. Patriotism was strong, our goals as a nation of right and wrong were clearly defined. We welcomed those who returned with celebration and open arms. This body passed legislation to assist the men and women of Desert Storm, and rightly so. We were a grateful nation.

We have not always been a grateful nation. Those who served in Vietnam did not come home to celebration. They came home to a divided nation, a nation struggling to determine in their own minds if the war was right and wrong. As a cochair of the Vietnam Veterans in Congress with my friend and colleague, the Honorable LANE EVANS, we continue to struggle with our other colleagues on issues particular to that war as well as others such as post traumatic stress disorder and agent orange.

Finally, after 20 years some progress has been made, but more is needed. There are those who cling to the belief and hope that their loved ones that served in Southeast Asia are still there. They are still unaccounted for and the struggle for many of us will continue until they are. Our colleagues in the other body are conducting hearings this week on the POW/MIA issue. A renewed effort is being initiated. It is one of the many haunting legacies of that war.

Last week I hosted a Veterans Conference in my congressional district along with my colleagues from North Carolina, Congressmen DAVID PRICE and TIM VALENTINE. The gentleman from Georgia, Congressman BEN JONES, a member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, was our guest speaker. Congressman JONES gave a wonderful speech and we are grateful for his participation. Congressman JONES pointed out that the recent Mission Commission findings and recommendations have been presented to the House and Senate Committees on Veterans' Affairs. This committee scrutinized the VA health care system and pointed out that the veterans hospitals are coming apart at the seams. Their solution was additional funding. While the House has responded by passing a VA–HUD appropriations bill that contains a $298 million increase over the President's budget request for VA health care, more needs to be done. The veterans in that audience last Saturday were largely World War II and Korean veterans. These veterans need health care. They need excellent doctors and hospitals. Our veterans of those wars have been promised health care benefits and if you have worked with a veteran attempting to get benefits you know of the incredible struggle that is faced by that veteran in obtaining benefits to which he or she is rightfully entitled.

We not only owe a debt of gratitude to our veterans who went in harms way, but also to those who are left at home to worry and wait. Often when a veteran returns, the home life becomes difficult. People and lives have been changed forever. We salute on Veterans Day the family of the veteran, the wives, the husbands, the children, mothers, and fathers that must carry on a strong vigilance.

This weekend many in this Chamber will be in Veterans Day parades and at other observances at which they will see our veterans who have given so much. Let us celebrate our victories and never forget our losses. Let us applaud our veterans and stand proudly with them. Because of their lives and sacrifices we continue to be blessed by living in a land that despite its flaws continues to represent liberty to all peoples around the world.

TRIBUTE TO AZAD "DUKE" JUKNAVORIAN

HON. CHESTER G. ATKINS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to pay tribute to Mr. Azad "Duke" Juknavorian of Lowell, MA, who is retiring after 26 years of dedicated service in the Middlesex County District Attorney's Office.

Duke is one of those rare individuals who consistently gives to his community. He has a long, impressive history of civic, political, and religious involvement in the Greater Lowell area. He is currently chairman of the Democratic City Committee, a position which he has held for over a decade. He was awarded the Armenian Apostolic Church's highest honor, is a New England Regional Armenian Church delegate and has been an officer at St. Vartanantz Church in Chelmsford. Duke is a member of St. John's Hospital Men's Club in Lowell, the Lowell Elks, and the Masons.

Born, raised, and educated in Lowell, Duke is a man who has served his Nation as well as his city. During World War II, he was a tank operator in Germany and now is active in the Disabled American Veterans' organization, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and is an Armenian American Veterans post commander.

Duke is truly a believer in democracy. His many years of dedication to the democratic process has greatly enriched the region. However, it is his kind, philanthropic nature, and commitment to his beliefs that leaves the biggest impression on those who are fortunate enough to meet him.

Mr. Speaker, while at the time of Duke's retirement, it is satisfying to look back at his achievements, it is even more gratifying to look forward to his continued involvement in the community and participation in democracy.

I congratulate Duke on his retirement and wish him, his wife Lucy, and their children, health and happiness in the coming years.

A TRIBUTE TO JIMMY AND ALAN WONG AND THE ART OF KARATE

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Jimmy and Alan Wong, owners of Key Fitness and Aerobics, where they instruct and specialize in the shotokan school of karate. Danielle Beck of the Islander News reports on this tremendous sport entitled, "Karate Instruction Aimed at Whole Being—Body, Mind, Spirit."

> Although Japanese martial arts have been around for hundreds of years, many people are just beginning to enjoy the physical and psychological benefits of the sport.
>
> From 1961 to the present, karate has experienced a large growth rate in the United States, but to many it is still not fully understood. In the United States, karate is often identified with brick-breaking and the more violent free-style of kumite competitions that comprise almost every U.S. competition.
>
> Because of this, the true basis of the sport such as kata, breathing exercises, and achieving harmony with one's higher nature, are sometimes forgotten.
>
> Jimmy and Alan Wong, owners of Key Fitness and Aerobics, are attempting to acquaint their students with these aspects of the sport from the beginning.
>
> "You have to start with the basic techniques," says Alan Wong. "When you know these, you can combine the other techniques."
> While there are different schools of karate, the Wongs specialize in the shotokan school. This school was founded by Gichin Funakoshi in 1915 and prevails mainly in the east of Japan.
>
> Funakoshi, a master of karate, was primarily an educator, whose teachings were directed at the whole man in mind, body and spirit. He emphasized the moral ethics of karate and refused to teach the art to the lay public, only instructing military and college personnel. This resulted in karate's strong acceptance into the Japanese martial arts.
>
> "He made karate more professional," explains Alan Wong. "Two or three centuries ago, karate was only used for self-defense. It didn't become a sport until Funakoshi."
>
> In order for students to progress in skill and advance in degree belts, they are taught the katas, or forms of karate.
>
> The katas are various techniques of defense and counterattacks performed in pre-determined moves one after the other. The 25 katas are beneficial for proper breathing and are done alone, not as a form of combat.
>
> Earning a black belt, karate's highest honor, takes many years and much discipline. For students to progress from white to yellow belt, they must master the first kata, heian shodan. To earn an orange belt, heian nidan must be mastered.
>
> The green belt is awarded for completing the third kata, heian sandan. This is followed by the heian yodan where the blue belt is awarded for the completion of the heian godan and advancement to the brown belt is signified by completing the teky shodan.
>
> "Karate gives you more concentration, coordination, self-control and also provides self-defense," says Jimmy Wong. "It's good for many different things and for people of all ages."
>
> With the completion of each class, the Wongs lead their students through a meditation of an old Japanese philosophy which states: Seek perfection of character. Be faithful. Endeavor. Respect others and refrain from violent behavior.
>
> "When we finish the meditation, we breathe and relax." says Jimmy Wong. "Everybody should learn this philosophy."

Again, I am pleased to recognize Jimmy and Alan Wong for their dedication in sharing the physical and psychological benefits of karate.

JOAQUIN F. BLAYA

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the 1990 U.S. census has confirmed that the American population changed more dramatically between 1980 and 1990 than at any other time in the 20th century. According to the U.S. census, nearly one in every four Americans has African, Asian, Hispanic, or American Indian ancestry. The Census Bureau has noted a 56-percent increase in the Hispanic population—an increase of 7.7 million people—since 1980. The Census Bureau also projects that Hispanics will account for an astonishing 42 percent of the Nation's growth between 1990 and the year 2010.

Mr. Joaquin F. Blaya, as the acting president of Univision Holdings Inc., was invited to provide testimony before the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Census and Population. As the Nation's leading Spanish-language communications network, Univision's television broadcasts combined with magazine circulation potentially reach 90 percent of the Nation's Hispanic population. Mr. Blaya's contact with and understanding of the Hispanic community has provided the subcommittee with a knowledgeable and insightful participant in the planning process for the 2000 census.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to the testimony provided by Mr. Joaquin F. Blaya and ask that they consider the importance of the recommendations made for the planning and implementation of the 2000 census.

OUR VETERANS DESERVE MORE THAN HOLLOW WORDS AND EMPTY PROMISES

HON. PETER A. DeFAZIO

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, it's appropriate that America honor its brave service men and women on Veterans Day. But those who served, in war or in peace, deserve to be remembered for more than just 1 day each year. They deserve to be honored every day. Unfortunately, that's not the case.

Veterans were dealt a cruel blow in last year's budget agreement. The budget package seriously cut into veterans benefits by requiring a $2 prescription drug copayment for medication provided on an outpatient basis to veterans with nonservice-connected disabilities. Despite an outcry from vets across the country, the copayment remains in place today.

We will soon be facing a grave crisis in the veterans health care system. Since 1980, funding for veterans health care has barely kept up with inflation. At the same time, demand for services has dramatically increased because the number of veterans over age 65 has doubled. Consequently, their health care needs are growing just as their incomes are shrinking and access to the veterans health care system is curtailed.

Our veterans deserve more than hollow words and empty promises.

That's why I'm introducing legislation today to repeal the $2 prescription drug copayment. The prescription drug copayment hurts those who can least afford it. To the elderly, disabled, and those living on a fixed income, the copayment can mean the difference between having enough to eat or taking care of an illness. No one should have to make that choice.

I'm sick and tired of the Government balancing the budget on the backs of this Nation's veterans and retired military personnel. No group of Americans is more deserving of the gratitude and respect of the Nation than our veterans. These men and women earned their benefits in good faith while defending our country.

We owe them no less.

A TRIBUTE TO ANNA ROLEN

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Ms. Anna Rolen, a south Florida woman who sketches historical sites of the Civil War. Ms. Rolen, who travels to many of the momentous sites, is fascinated by history. In a Miami Herald article entitled, "Artist's Work Captures Mood of Civil War," Bea Moss reports of Ms. Rolen's sketches:

ARTIST'S WORK CAPTURES MOOD OF CIVIL WAR

(By Bea Moss)

Where once two opposing generals rode through the countryside with their armies, a South Dade woman now drives through their battlefields, sketching the things they left behind.

Artist Anna Rolen's travels take her to historic sites of the Civil War.

"I sketch a lot of places where the Civil War was fought, but it's sort of by default," said Rolen, whose husband, James, is a management consultant and whose business takes the couple from coast to coast.

They travel mostly by car and she draws while he drives.

"It's amazing what she does," James Rolen said. "She sketches from the car and pencils scenes in minutes."

"I've gotten so fast that I can draw it and my memory finishes it off," Anna Rolen said.

Areas around Alexandria and Petersburg, Va., and Washington, D.C., are some of her favorite spots.

"Two or three summers ago we were in Petersburg and I had a chance to go to the battlefield there and I relived the Civil War," she said.

That's where she did her first sketches of The Dictator, a powerful Union Army mortar, now located at the Petersburg National Battlefield.

"It was so symbolic to me of the North's power during the war," Rolen said.

Recently, during a special ceremony, she presented the original painting to the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo., where it now hangs in the academy's museum.

One of the drawings she is most proud of is of Robert E. Lee's boyhood home in Alexandria, Va., now a museum. She had it made into a greeting card and docents at the museum make it available for private sale.

"It's a very pleasant presentation of the house," said the home's director, Juanita Miller. "No question that it's accurate."

Another favorite is a watercolor of the Center Hill Mansion in Petersburg, the house that served as Union headquarters after the siege of Petersburg ended. The curator of the Lee House bought the original.

Rolen sketches anything that strikes her fancy. Once, while stranded at an out-of-the-way gas station waiting for car repairs, she drew a picture of a pile of old tires. The original hangs in her home.

A native of Montreal, Rolen has a degree in nursing and used her nursing skills for 15 years in New York hospitals.

Along the way she took art courses at the Art Students League and the National Academy in New York, and later at the Boston Museum.

Her love of history may have been nurtured, she said, because of the history around her. She grew up in Boston and attended the Mather School, founded in 1639; Girls' Latin, another old Boston school; and the University of Pennsylvania, founded in 1740.

Her art plans are uncertain, she said, but Rolen will continue to draw and paint and hopes to start doing larger pictures.

"Maybe I'll branch out into the Revolutionary War," she said.

I would like to recognize Ms. Rolen for using her talent and applying it to a fascinating time of American history.

TRIBUTE TO THOSE WHO DEFENDED PEARL HARBOR

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, on December 7, our country will mark the 50th anniversary of the heinous surprise attack on Pearl Harbor and the surrounding military installations on the island of Oahu, HI.

As our Nation recognizes the anniversary of this attack, I would like to extend my sincerest respect and gratitude to all of the men who valiantly defended Pearl Harbor that day, especially to those who gave the ultimate sacrifice—their lives—for the preservation of the ideals and principles of our great Nation.

I would also like to recognize and praise the northwest Indiana members of the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association. The association, which is dedicated to the memory of those who were killed in action on that fateful December day, consists of Pearl Harbor veterans who were on active duty on the island during the time of the attack. Their slogan, "Remember Pearl Harbor—Keep America Alert," is meant to serve as a reminder that our country must never again suffer a similar tragedy.

With the utmost respect, I recognize: Merle F. Berdine, Peter J. Bisbis, William P. Burns, Raymond J. Crane, George Churley, Rock E. Flynn, Joseph C. Gawor, Harry H. Hubbard, Edward F. Jagiela, Andrew A. Janiga, Emil L. Katona, John J. Kostolnick, Herman Krumdick, John J. Latko, George W. Lininger, Herbert R. Roach, and Francis A. Straukas. May no other Americans have to witness the horrors or live through the experience which these noble men did.

TRIBUTE TO RUSSELL ROEMMELE, A DISTINGUISHED JOURNALIST AND CITIZEN OF BLOOMFIELD, NJ

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest pride that I rise today to pay special tribute to an extraordinary man from my Eighth Congressional District in New Jersey. A man who has lent his time and talents to the improvement of his community and preservation of its history. Russell Roemmele has been called the Public Watchdog of Bloomfield, NJ.

This respected and outspoken journalist will be honored at a testimonial dinner on Friday, November 15, at the Friar Tuck Inn in Cedar Grove, NJ. Proceeds from this gala event will go for the establishment of a scholarship fund in Mr. Roemmele's name for a Bloomfield High School senior who has done the most during his high school career to bring forth the spirit, history, and heritage of the community, whether through writings or deeds.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fitting tribute to a man who has dedicated his life to those same goals. As managing editor of Bloomfield Life since 1981 and a reporter for more than 30 years, Mr. Roemmele has focused his writings on life in and around Bloomfield. To sum up his writings to his own words, "My philosophy has always been to emphasize history and heritage of family, neighborhood, community, county, state and America." He seeks to "uphold the traditions that have come down to us and, at some time, make adjustments that are necessary for each new generation."

Mr. Roemmele has written for several newspapers before coming to Bloomfield Life, including the Independent Press, Newark Evening News, and the New York Herald Tribune. In those years he has always striven to illuminate the page with honest prose and straightforward commentary on the world around him. His friends know that his strong will is tempered with a good and gentle heart.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my colleagues here in the House join with me in sharing the pride felt by Mr. Roemmele's lovely wife, Rosemary, and their four children and three grandchildren. Russell Roemmele is that rare individual who combines a rich appreciation for the past and all that it has to teach us with a true understanding that the future is sculpted by the decisions made today.

Mr. Speaker, Russell Roemmele is an active caring citizen of his community and of this Nation. He inspires others with his words and leads by his example. Mr. Roemmele is being honored for his devotion of the fundamental ideals upon which this country was founded and the spirit with which he has carried them to his neighbor. I am proud indeed to represent such a man as this here in the People's House.

A TRIBUTE TO RAFAEL PORTELA

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize Mr. Rafael Portela, a constituent from my congressional district and president of the Key Biscayne Athletic Club. In an article in the Islander News entitled, "KBAC President Continues Club's Traditions" Danielle Beck reports on Mr. Portela's strong sense of community involvement:

"TUTY" PORTELA—KEY BISCAYNE ATHLETIC CLUB PRESIDENT—HONORED

When Rafael "Tuty" Portela stepped on the field for the very first soccer game of the Key Biscayne Athletic Club in 1966, he probably never imagined that, he'd be president of the organization.

But as fate would have it, spurred by a strong sense of community involvement, he finds himself 25 years later at the helm of that organization.

"I decided to become involved as an adult because a lot of the people I played with then are involved now," he says. "Plus, my kids are that age where they can participate, so I wanted to be a part of that."

Born in Cuba, Portela arrived on Key Biscayne in 1961 with his family. After looking for homes in the Miami area, they decided on Key Biscayne because it reminded his mother of Cuba.

"She fell in live with it," says Portela.

After attending Key Biscayne Elementary School, Belen, and Coral Gables Senior High, Portela attended college at Auburn University. While in high school, he became All City, All State and High School All-American in soccer and his senior-year team placed second in the state. He also started for the football team and was the kicker. At Auburn, he participated in club soccer.

"There's no question it was all due to the athletic club and (KBAC soccer coach) Mr. Foster," he says.

After Auburn, he earned his medical degree from Penn State and completed his ears, nose and throat residency at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore.

"After being away, I knew I wanted to come back and live in the area, and it had to be Key Biscayne," he says.

With his wife Carolina, his high school sweetheart, he moved back to the Key in 1988 and is now raising his own family here.

"I don't think there's any better place," he says.

Following his tenure as vice president of the athletic club last year, he was elected as president for the 1991–92 term and is a strong advocate of children and athletics.

"Kids learn to get along with other kids and they learn about winning and losing," he says. "Team sports are like everyday hurdles and they help you learn how to manage them in the long run. I think it helps kids develop their potential."

As his son Antonio, 9, enters his third season with the club, his 8-year old daughter, Victoria, begins her second year and Carolina, 4 anxiously awaits her chance next year, Portela is thankful for coach Ralph Foster.

Foster was the Key Biscayne Elementary School's sixth grade physical education instructor when Portela began playing soccer for him. From Foster's involvement with the children and the soccer program, the athletic club soon developed and incorporated baseball and football.

"As far as dedication and volunteering, he's done it for over 20 years," says Portela about Foster. "He was the only coach for all the age groups."

To continue the winning tradition of the club, Portela and other members of the KBAC are attempting to make the club as competitive as possible with outside teams, but oftentimes lack of funds stands in the way. "It's become more difficult to get involved for coaching so it's difficult to set out in new territories," says Portela. "We're hoping our group enlarges."

To help meet the costs of running the sports programs, the group holds three major fund raisers a year including a Christmas tree sale beginning in early December, an auction in May and a Dolphin Night at the beginning of summer.

As far as future plans for the athletic club are concerned, Portela hopes to maintain the high, sportsmanlike standards and the fun times that are an integral part of the KBAC philosophy.

"I want the kids to have similar opportunities to the ones we had when we were their age," he says.

I would like to recognize Rafael "Tuty" Portela for his dedication and volunteering he has done throughout the years.

INTRODUCTION OF THE ENTERPRISE CAPITAL FORMATION ACT OF 1991

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a very important piece of legislation, the Enterprise Capital Formation Act of 1991. This legislation takes a fresh and bipartisan approach to the issue of capital gains by providing lower rates for long-term investment in small companies. Its goal is to promote economic growth and the creation of jobs by lowering the cost of capital for smaller American companies, encouraging patient capital investment, and making smaller firms less reliant on foreign capital.

Equally important, this measure would accomplish these goals without bankrupting the Federal Government. The Joint Tax Committee estimates that this legislation will cost under $1 billion over a 5-year period.

Under my proposal, individual or corporate investors making direct stock purchases that qualify as seed or venture capital investment would be afforded a reduction in their capital gains rate, provided that they meet certain criteria. Seed capital investment is defined to be the purchase of stock in a company with less than $5 million in paid-in equity. Venture capital investment is defined as the purchase of stock in a company with less than $100 million in paid-in equity. Paid-in equity refers to the amount of capital that a company receives when it sells its own stock.

If an investor makes a direct purchase of qualifying stock, and then holds that stock for 5 years, that individual or corporation would be afforded a 50-percent reduction in the capital gains tax rate upon sale of the stock and realization of any gain. In addition, for seed capital investments, an investor could accrue an additional 10-percent reduction per year in the capital gains tax rate, up to a maximum 100-percent deduction for stock held for 10 years.

While the bill is prospective only, it affords current stockholders an opportunity to take advantage of the capital gains tax benefit by marking to market the value of stock purchased previously. The investor could then use the new capital gains rate on gains accrued on the stock from that point forward.

The bill contains a series of antiabuse provisions. For example, the proposal would prevent companies from evading the effective date by redeeming existing stock and issuing new, qualifying stock. It would also prevent a large company from splitting itself into smaller companies and issuing qualifying stock. An active trade or business test is included to prevent the formation of shell corporations created for tax shelter purposes, and a retained earnings test would be included to prevent companies that have recently undergone a leveraged buyout from attempting to issue qualifying stock.

America needs an incentive for patient investments in the companies that will generate the technology, markets, and jobs of tomorrow. The Enterprise Capital Formation Act would do this by literally forming new capital for startup and other small companies. The bill would not simply encourage investors to sell the capital assets they acquired before the incentive went into effect, and it would not apply to the trading of investment on the secondary markets, transactions that do not put capital into the hands of entrepreneurs.

It is important to note that the high cost and scarcity of capital for small, entrepreneurial firms has put America at a disadvantage. The alarming slowdown in capital investments in startup and other small firms has been highlighted in national publications such as the Wall Street Journal and New York Times. Increasingly smaller firms are having to turn to investors from our major international competitors to fund their growth. Entrepreneurship should be encouraged here at home, and this bill proposes to establish that encouragement.

Mr. Speaker, I urge each of my colleagues to cosponsor this important legislation.

TRIBUTE TO REV. TONEY JACKSON

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would like my colleagues here in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in honoring a spiritual leader in my community, a man known for his dedication and unselfish service, Rev. Toney E. Jackson, Sr. Reverend Jackson is being honored this weekend on the occasion of his fifth anniversary as pastor of the Bethlehem Baptist Church, which I am proud to add is the church where I was baptized over 50 years ago, and which I still attend.

One of eight children, Reverend Jackson was born in Edgefield, SC, to Mrs. Marian and the late Carletha Jackson.

In 1970, he graduated from Morehouse College in Atlanta, where he received a B.A. degree. He received his M.A. degree in 1972 from Montclair State College, Upper Montclair, NJ. He has done further study at Northeastern Bible College in Essex Fells, NJ, and at New York Bible School.

Reverend Jackson is a former teacher in the East Orange Public School System. During his service as a teacher, he worked diligently to provide his students with the knowledge and skills that they would need to compete in our highly complex and competitive society. In addition to teaching academics, Reverend Jackson also strived to teach positive values, integrity, and principles of good conduct. He resigned from the East Orange School System to become Pastor of the Bethlehem Baptist Church.

Reverend Jackson was ordained to the work of the Gospel ministry in 1981 by the New Hope Baptist Church in East Orange under the leadership of the Rev. Leonidas B. Young. Faithfully, he served there for 8 years as an assistant to Reverend Young.

Reverend Jackson served on the board of directors of the Citizens Volunteer Workers for Essex County Jails from 1979 to 1981, cofounded the Agape Brothers, and serves as a volunteer for several hospitals in the Newark area. He is also a member of the NAACP.

Reverend Jackson has been a positive influence in the lives of all those he has come in contact with, young and old alike. In his work with youth, he has shown exemplary leadership by helping them confront the contemporary problems that they must deal with in their everyday lives.

He does not shy away from topics which are controversial, because he believes that these issues must be addressed. Members of Bethlehem Baptist feel fortunate to have the benefit of Reverend Jackson's spiritual leadership.

Reverend Jackson and his wife, Rosemary Flowers Jackson, were married in 1976 and are the parents of two children, Tameka and Toney, Jr.

Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues join with me and the entire Bethlehem Baptist family in offering congratulations and appreciation to Reverend Jackson on this very special occasion.

RON ERBEL—STATE VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTER OF THE YEAR AWARD

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 7, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize today one of my constituents Ron Erbel who was selected as 1991 State Volunteer Firefighter of the Year by the Florida Fire Marshals Association. An article for the Islander News, "Resident nominated for firefighter award" tells about Mr. Erbel's contributions to Dade County's only volunteer fire department—the Key Biscayne Volunteer Fire Department:

> Ron Erbel, a 14-year veteran with the Key Biscayne Volunteer Fire Department, has been nominated for the 1991 State Volunteer Firefighter of the Year award.
> As a member of the 38-year-old department, Erbel has twice served as chief. Owner of The Good Earth landscaping service, he works on the Key, and is generally credited with being one of the first of the volunteers on the scene whenever a call for fire assistance goes out.
>
> Last year, Erbel was one of the first firefighters to arrive after two fires ignited inside a residence on the Key. He entered the house and put out one of the blazes alone, prior to the arrival of the Metro suppression unit. He also assisted the aerial unit in extinguishing the second fire inside the building.
>
> More recently, he was able to help 10-year-old Sergio Sardinas after the boy was struck by a car while riding his bicycle. Erbel gave immediate assistance to the boy, who suffered severe head injuries, and continued to aid him until the Metro-Dade rescue unit arrived. He then rode on the rescue truck with Sardinas, never leaving the patient's side until the hospital crew took over.
>
> Metro firefighter Steve Bahr said that Erbel's assistance may have contributed to saving Sardinas' life.
>
> Spurred by the near tragedy, Erbel quickly initiated a bicycle safety awareness program. Knowing how resistant many young people are to wearing helmets, he organized a sale of helmets that is still ongoing on Saturdays at the fire station.
> Erbel also bought from his own funds two fire trucks for use in fund-raising and public service events. The trucks have appeared through the years at various Key functions, including the Fourth of July parade. Erbel has also taken an active role in distributing fire prevention materials and handouts at numerous special events, and has been involved in fire prevention displays at public school activities.
>
> Battalion Chief Dallas J. Bailey said "Captain Erbel has always been one of the first volunteers on the scene, sometimes ahead of our units. He stands out as very special and deserves recognition for his unselfish efforts."
> Erbel, who is the first volunteer firefighter ever to be nominated for the award from Dade County, has also contributed his time to numerous Key Biscayne functions and causes, including the Key Biscayne Quiet Gardens, the Key Biscayne Property Taxpayers Association Inc. and the Key Biscayne Presbyterian Church.
>
> The winner of the award will be announced in October.

I am happy to pay tribute to Ron Erbel by reprinting this article from the Islander News. He is the first volunteer firefighter ever to win the award from Dade County.

Two other Dade firefighters from the Metro-Dade Fire Department also received awards from the Florida Fire Marshals Association. Lt. John Mitchell received the Firefighter of the Year Award and Lt. Michael Myers received the Fire Inspector of the Year Award.

Along with Ron Erbel, these two Metro-Dade firefighters will be honored by the Metro-Dade County Commission on November 19. I am proud to honor these men who have risked their lives to save their neighbors' lives and property from fires.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Speaker. Will the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] please come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance?

Mr. RICHARDSON led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The Speaker. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to clause 4 of rule I, the Speaker signed the following enrolled bill on Thursday, November 7, 1991:

H.R. 2707. An act making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1992, and for other purposes.

MAGIC'S TRAGEDY SHOULD WAKE UP OUR NATION

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it takes a tragedy like Magic Johnson's to wake up a nation. The country literally stopped, as it did when President Kennedy was assassinated, when this gifted young man disclosed that he had the AIDS virus. We all lost something.

Mr. Speaker, what are the lessons to be learned after feeling such pain? First, that AIDS can hit anyone, regardless of their prominence and station in life. Second, that an important deterrent is to practice safe sex. And third, that AIDS education is not sufficient, that we need to invest in finding a cure. This takes resources and leadership. We all know those startling statistics: 1 million Americans infected, half of India and Uganda, with the AIDS virus by the year 2000.

Mr. Speaker, let the grace of Magic Johnson illuminate our country's leaders to redouble our effort to kill this dreaded disease before it takes our hearts out the way it did yesterday.

THANK GOODNESS MAGIC IS DEALING STRAIGHT

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, Magic Johnson's tragic announcement yesterday was a real heart stopper. But the one thing I want to say to him is: "Thank goodness you're setting such a marvelous example for this country."

Mr. Speaker, he is dealing straight. Just as he shot baskets straight on, he is dealing straight on about this disease in trying to give America a wakeup call. His candor and forthrightness is something I hope we all salute and follow.

Mr. Speaker, I want to call upon the TV networks. I find it positively amazing they made so much money showing games of a man like this, and they are willing to make money showing alcohol ads that cost lives, but they have been refusing to show any ads on condoms that could save lives. Magic Johnson's coming forward and dealing straight is a time that the networks should start coming forward and dealing straight. America should start dealing straight. Let us save lives rather than continuing to risk lives by pretending this great puritanical thing is going on when we know it really is not.

MAGIC, WE NEED YOU NOW MORE THAN EVER

(Mr. DOWNEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, one of the most exciting memories of my life was playing a pickup game of basketball with Magic Johnson. For this old, slow amateur to be on the receiving end of one of his mystical look-away passes is something I will never forget. Millions of basketball fans around the world will mourn his leaving the game. But the memories of Magic's talent, sportsmanship, and humanity will forever be a part of all those who ever saw him play.

The special quality that distinguished Magic Johnson was the quiet nobility of his spirit. This was dramatically revealed yesterday, off the basketball court, when Magic announced his retirement from basketball because he is infected with the HIV virus. It was a sad moment for sports fans all across America.

But in making his announcement, Magic has reminded us that the challenge of the HIV infection is to keep our society focused on the reality that it is a preventable disease. Our fervor to find a cure should be as great as the efforts to inform Americans of the ways to avoid infection.

Each day hundreds of people across this land face the same personal tragedy that Magic Johnson now confronts. For those people and their families, it is the beginning of an enduring nightmare that many must suffer alone and afraid. Occasionally, like yesterday, their plight is highlighted by the powerful example of a celebrity victim like Magic Johnson and we are once again reminded that the AIDS virus is nondiscriminating and it is a terrible enemy.

Magic, we need you now more than ever. We need you to serve as a spokesman for this disease so that it doesn't slide back into obscurity. We need you to continue to remind us that Government must take the lead in stopping the spread of AIDS. We need you, Magic, as our new point guard in getting the resources to do this. And most of all, we need you Magic, because you are a living symbol of the shining humanity and quiet dignity that should inspire us all.

BUSH BOASTS SECURITY FOR EUROPE, NOT FOR THE UNEMPLOYED AT HOME

(Mr. AUCOIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Speaker, George Bush was in Rome today. He boasted that he had taken decisive steps for the future of European security. Oregonians, who I represent, would have preferred the President to have been in Roseburg, not Rome, and to have announced he would focus on their economic security.

One hundred thirty days ago this House passed the first bill to extend American unemployment benefits, which the President continues to oppose. Thirty-five thousand nine hundred fifty-nine Oregonians have received their first unemployment check since that time, and 14,043 have received their last check because their unemployment has expired.

What does this administration say about the security of these Americans? Well, apparently that Rome is more important than Roseburg, that Europe is more important than the American heartland, the S&L bailout is more important than Americans who have been laid off.

I think we ought to get one thing straight. Unemployment insurance is not a handout, it is not welfare. It is a safety net and insurance policy, just as sure as medical insurance, to help out-of-work Americans survive. Workers need this money to pay the bills, to put food on the table for their kids and to obtain the retraining that they need. Employers have paid into the unemployment trust fund, and, if there is a $8 billion surplus in this account, I think it is incumbent upon the President to use those funds for the security of Americans on Main Street, in Roseburg, not in Rome.

BETTER HEALTH CARE SERVICES NEEDED FOR VETERANS

(Mr. TALLON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of this Veterans Day weekend, I rise urging the speedy passage of the veterans bill of rights.

Our brave men and women went to battle with our cherished freedoms as their inspiration, yet returned home only to be forced to stare down the barrel of inadequate health services.

Every day, veteran after veteran marches into my district office fed up with a health care system that in reality is no more than a frustrating battlefield.

If the President can forgive a $7 billion loan to Egypt and the administration can ask for the equivalent of $5,000 in foreign assistance for every man, woman, and child in Israel, then surely we can live up to the promise of adequate and decent health care to our veterans.

Let us not forget those who did the heavy lifting to secure our superpower status in this world.

I urge all my colleagues to give these heroes their rightful due.

DOMESTIC PROBLEMS DEMAND THE PRESIDENT'S ATTENTION AND HIS COOPERATION WITH CONGRESS

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, while driving to the Hill this morning, I turned on the radio and listened to the President's press conference. He was conducting his press conference from the Villa Taverna, which is the residence of the U.S. Ambassador in Rome.

I am sure the President was surprised, as I was myself, at the extent of the questioning, because I think only one foreign policy question, one NATO-related question, was asked of him. The other questions were all about the domestic economy and about the situation of joblessness here at home.

I believe the President is correct in saying that there is a need for us to continue relationships with the European nations and to continue our membership in NATO, and that NATO has a new, though very different, role for the future than it has had in the last 50 years.

But at the same time it is very clear that the essence of those questions is: Will we be able to take care of the people here at home as well as we have taken care of the people around the world?

Mr. Speaker, I think there is a way to do it, and with the President's leadership and with his cooperation, I think this Chamber and the other body can fashion that kind of a domestic program that will in fact make life here at home as nice as it has been made for those abroad.

THE PRESIDENT MUST GIVE LEADERSHIP IN TIME OF RECESSION

(Mr. LEVIN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I just heard the President in his press conference. He says he is not convinced that the United States is in a recession.

The President should come home and talk to people in Michigan and elsewhere. Then he would know there is a recession. He says his travels to Japan are necessary for jobs in Michigan. What is necessary is not more talk in Japan but action here at home.

Mr. Brady says he is constitutionally opposed to this pessimism about the economy. Well, what the Constitution says to Mr. Brady is this: "When there is a recession, be realistic. Lead. Take your head out of the sand."

Mr. Speaker, they are still with their heads in the sand despite Pennsylvania. I hope that Mr. Brady will say to the President, "Come home. Look at reality. Our people are hurting. We need to take action."

COMMITTEE ON RULES PLANS CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2837, THE DAIRY BILL, AND H.R. 2929, THE CALIFORNIA DESERT PROTECTION ACT

(Mr. BONIOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee plans to consider two bills, H.R. 2837, the dairy bill, and H.R. 2929, the California Desert Protection Act, on Wednesday, November 13.

The committee is considering a rule for each bill which may structure the offering of amendments and permit only those amendments designated in the rule to be offered. In order to ensure Members' rights to offer amendments under this structure they should submit 55 copies of their amendment, together with a brief explanation of the amendment, to the committee office located in H-312 of the Capitol no later than 5 p.m. on Tuesday, November 12.

Amendments to H.R. 2837, the dairy bill, should be drafted to the de la Garza substitute which will appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Friday, November 8 and will be available in the Agriculture Committee office today.

Amendments to H.R. 2929, the California Desert Protection Act, should be drafted to the Interior Committee reported bill which is available in the House document room.

I have sent "Dear Colleague" letters to all Members and committee offices which explain these procedures further. We appreciate the cooperation of all Members in our effort to be fair and orderly in granting a rule.

REPORT ON HOUSE RESOLUTION 258, CREATING A TASK FORCE TO INVESTIGATE ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING THE HOLDING OF AMERICANS AS HOSTAGES BY IRAN

Mr. BONIOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 102-296, part I) on the resolution (H. Res. 258) creating a task force of members of the Foreign Affairs Committee to investigate certain allegations concerning the holding of Americans as hostages by Iran in 1980, which was referred to the Committee on House Administration for a period ending not later than Friday, November 15, 1991, for consideration of such provisions of the resolution and amendment as fall within the jurisdiction of that committee pursuant to clause 1(k) of rule X, and ordered to be printed.

A PRESCRIPTION FOR CURING U.S. ECONOMIC WOES, LEADERSHIP AT HOME

(Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I heard the President's press conference from Rome this morning. He indicated that he was not sure there is a recession in this country.

I, frankly, agree with Secretary Brady, that it does not do a lot of good to be depressed and constantly talk about what is wrong. But you cannot diagnose an illness or at least you cannot treat it unless you know what it is. You have to understand what is wrong before you begin prescribing a remedy.

After a decade of "prosperity is just around the corner," showing faulty and phony numbers out of every office of this Government, and trying to describe an economic prosperity that did not exist, we now have a ship of state that is absolutely loaded with debt and very close to sinking. We have a debt that is almost $4 trillion. The deficit this fiscal year is going to be over $400 billion if they are not dishonest about taking the Social Security revenues. That is over $400 billion, a billion and a quarter dollars a day that is being spent that is not being brought in in revenues and that is being charged to our grandkids.

Mr. Speaker, we must do something to pull this country out of this economic trouble. The first thing we need is leadership. The President has traveled around the Equator three times on Air Force One since his term of office began. He has gone over 300,000 miles all around the world promising things for everybody. And it's time for him to come home and roll up his sleeves and work with a Congress that is willing to follow his lead to put this country back on track. This country is in trouble. It is time to take care of things here at home.

THE "OCTOBER SURPRISE" RESOLUTION FROM THE RULES COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to call attention to the fact that the distinguished majority whip has just filed a report on legislation which was marked up by our Rules Committee, creating a task force on the so-called October surprise.

Mr. Speaker, I will include at the end of my remarks the minority views of that report that was just filed, and also the General Accounting Office testimony before our committee.

Mr. Speaker, we went through 4 hours of testimony yesterday. At the end of the day the General Accounting Office simply said that there were no grounds at all for believing that President Bush or his campaign were involved in the so-called October surprise or that President Bush was in Paris dealing with Iranians as so many of these ridiculous House rumors have said.

I would just say this, we spent $40 million in 4 years on an Iran-Contra witch hunt. We have already spent 85 man-days and $55,000 on this ridiculous October surprise witch hunt. Certainly we do not need to continue this kind of waste of the taxpayers' money.

I have to really take exception to some of the 1-minutes that were made on the floor here this morning because they are criticizing President Bush for being at the NATO conference and meeting with our allies over there. Do you know what he is doing over there? He is over there doing the same thing I was doing 3 weeks ago, carrying a message for America and carrying a message for you on the Democrat side of the aisle. Your message has been to cut back our troops in NATO, let's bring some of them home.

That is exactly what President Bush is doing over there, saving the taxpayers money. Some of these people have the nerve to come down here in the well and hypocritically criticize the President. I think that is a shame.

Mr. Speaker, today we are faced with a $300 billion deficit—at least it was $300 billion up until a couple of months ago. Now the new estimates are $350 billion, all caused by this irresponsible, drunken spending spree that this Congress has been on for so many years.

When are we going to wake up? Right now there is a Defense budget waiting to come before our Committee on Rules next Tuesday which has in it, would you believe, $1 billion in foreign aid for the former Soviet Union. One billion dollars, which we are going to take out of our Defense budget, which means laying off our American troops and putting them on the unemployment rolls. And we are going to take that $1 billion and give it to the Soviet Union so that they can keep their troops under arms and getting a paycheck.

What is going on around here? I cannot wait for that bill to come to the Committee on Rules, because we are going to make a rule in order where we can separate that $1 billion. We are going to put people's feet to the fire, those who are talking about all this foreign aid. We are not going to give the Soviet Union a nickel. Loans, maybe; credits, maybe; but not a nickel in gifts and grants, mark my word. I hope all Members are here next week.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to include in the RECORD the text of the GAO study on President Bush's supposed trip to Paris to meet with Iranians; a listing of the House staff members who met with the GAO during the course of the GAO's investigation; and, finally, a copy of the minority reviews that were filed with the so-called October surprise resolution.

PRELIMINARY INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED 1980 NEGOTIATIONS TO DELAY RELEASE OF IRANIAN HOSTAGES UNTIL AFTER NOVEMBER ELECTION

(Testimony before the Committee on Rules, House of Representatives, Statement of James F. Hinchman, General Counsel)

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

We are pleased to be here to discuss our preliminary inquiry undertaken last year into the facts surrounding allegations made by Richard Brenneke for which he was tried in his May 1990 trial on charges of making a false declaration before a federal court. Mr. Brenneke alleged that he and high-ranking officials of the Reagan-Bush campaign staff had met with Iranian officials in Paris, France, in October 1980, to negotiate delaying the release of the Iranian-held American hostages until after the November election. This preliminary inquiry was requested on July 5, 1990, by the Chairman, Subcommittee on Legislation and National Security, House Committee on General Operations.

In summary, during our preliminary inquiry we were unable to develop evidence to corroborate Mr. Brenneke's allegations.

THE REQUEST

After several meetings with the Subcommittee staff and a staff representative of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, we and the staff agreed that the sensitivity of the subject demanded that we periodically keep the Subcommittee staff apprised of developments and that we limit the scope of the inquiry to specific issues identified by the staff. The Subcommittee staff also asked that the Subcommittee not be identified as having requested the inquiry. At the time of the request, GAO's long-standing written policy, which had evolved over time in response to congressional needs, allowed requesters of GAO reviews and investigations to request anonymity during the course of the investigation itself. This policy has since been changed. It is now GAO's policy to identify the requester of any review or investigation when asked for that information.

THE INQUIRY

As the Subcommittee staff requested, the initial focus of our inquiry was the statements made and evidence introduced at the Brenneke trial. We first reviewed the trial transcript and extensive evidence obtained by the defense attorneys through discovery, including the results of numerous Federal Bureau of Investigation interviews related to the subject. We also interviewed Brenneke, his two attorneys, and the prosecuting attorney. Brenneke and his lawyers reiterated Brenneke's statements that he had participated in and arranged a meeting in France in October 1980 attended by William Casey, then the Republican presidential campaign manager; Donald Gregg, then national security council staff; representatives of the Iranian government; and individuals working for the French, British, and Israeli governments. However, they provided no documentary evidence in support of these statements. Information furnished by Brenneke and his attorneys in support of his allegations was extraneous or unsupported, or would have required extensive investigative activity beyond the scope of our inquiry. The prosecuting attorney declined to provide any comment outside the official record of the government's case and findings relative to the investigation it undertook to prepare for trial.

Brenneke was charged with making a false declaration at the sentencing of an associate, Heinrich Rupp, who had been tried for bank fraud. One of the statements attributed to Brenneke was that he saw then candidate George Bush in Paris in October 1980. Brenneke's attorneys referred us to a transcript of Brenneke's trial testimony and a letter he had sent to the trial's presiding judge in which he stated both that his information was provided by Heinrich Rupp and that his prior statements at Rupp's trial needed clarification. In Brenneke's clarified testimony and in our interview of Brenneke, he claimed no first-hand knowledge of Bush's presence in Paris in October 1980. He stated that his information came from Rupp, who allegedly piloted one of the planes carrying officials to the meeting.

Through his attorneys, Rupp declined several requests for an interview. In lieu of an interview, his attorneys provided a videotaped interview of Rupp by a television reporter in which Rupp reiterated his statement that he had seen someone who he was fairly confident was Bush in Paris in October 1980. The attorneys provided copies of airline identification cards and an envelope from a Paris hotel, none of which were supportive of the allegations.

To further clarify the facts surrounding Rupp's alleged flight to Paris, we contacted the Federal Aviation Administration and charter aircraft companies allegedly involved and obtained flight logs for one of the planes allegedly involved. We also checked what we had been told was Rupp's description of the weather on the day of the flight against meteorological records at two alleged refueling locations. We found no evidence to support the allegations about the flight to Paris. Additionally, an interview of another charter airline pilot alleged to have participated in or arranged the flight failed to yield any corroboration. Contact with an official of a second charter aircraft company allegedly involved also yielded no witnesses with information of assistance to us.

We were asked to review relevant Secret Service documentation and conduct interviews as to George Bush's whereabouts on the dates in question. A review of relevant press articles and Secret Service records placed then candidate Bush in the United States the weekend of October 17–19, 1980, the weekend he was alleged to be in Paris. During interviews of supervisory Secret Service agents assigned to candidate Bush, one agent recalled accompanying Bush to the Chevy Chase Country Club for a luncheon engagement with Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart on October 19, 1980. Although a review of Justice Stewart's appointment calendars retrieved from the Yale University library revealed no entries for appointments on October 19, 1980, Secret Service logs reflect a motorcade to the country club on this date. Interviews of personnel at the country club yielded no documentation of this event, as records for such activities are not maintained.

As requested by the Subcommittee staff, we periodically supplemented these inquiries with interviews of other individuals identified as having pertinent information, specifically Casey's former secretary and a number of journalists. These interviews did not corroborate the allegations.

Supplementary inquiries to the Customs Service in an attempt to identify records of reentry into the country by the parties allegedly involved were unsuccessful because such records were no longer maintained.

We regularly briefed the Subcommittee staff throughout the course of this inquiry. During February 1991 discussions with the staff, we agreed to terminate our inquiry and, given the limited nature of the inquiry, to issue no written report. Since terminating the inquiry, we have briefed the majority and minority staff of several House Committees, as well as that of the Speaker of the House and the House Majority and Minority Leaders.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes our statement. At this time, we would be pleased to answer questions you may have.

MINORITY VIEWS ON HOUSE RESOLUTION 258

We have consistently indicated that we would work with the majority on creating a so-called "October Surprise" Task Force so long as suspicions were removed that this was being done simply to spring a new October surprise on the eve of next year's elections for partisan, political purposes.

We agree that it is important to get to the bottom of allegations that anything unlawful or unethical may have been done by anyone in 1980 to affect the timing of the release of Americans being held hostage in Iran.

But the fact that this resolution confines itself to the 1980 Reagan campaign, and persons associated with it, does not meet that basic goal. By not including the Carter Administration within the scope of the inquiry, the resolution makes it impossible to get the full picture.

And, as GAO's own investigative experts have informed us, it would be impossible to conduct a thorough investigation into various allegations unless the inquiry included contemporaneous efforts by U.S. government officials in 1980 to secure the release of hostages, including any government proposals to swap arms for hostages.

While we do not question the many legitimate efforts of the Carter Administration to effect the release of the hostages, we are concerned about reports, such as that of Carter National Security Council aide Gary Sick, in his book, All Fall Down, that the Administration did propose to the Iranian Government the release of some $150-million in frozen arms shipments in exchange for the hostages.

For this inquiry to be truly comprehensive, nonpartisan, and objective, it is critical that all such efforts, by whatever parties, be fully examined, to determine whether any laws or executive orders may have been violated, or that such information was kept from the American people and the appropriate committees of the Congress.

At a minimum, the resolution should be amended to include the hostage release efforts of the Carter Administration within the scope of the inquiry. And secondly, it should be amended to put a six-month deadline on the inquiry unless the House specifically extends it for good cause. Without these two changes, the resolution is badly partisan and political, and the well will be poisoned before the investigation even begins.

For these reasons alone, we favor the resolution introduced by the Republican Leader (Mr. Michel), H. Res. 255, over the Hamilton resolution, since it both includes the Carter Administration under the scope of the inquiry and puts a six-month deadline on the inquiry, subject to extension by the House.

But beyond those reasons, the Michel resolution is preferable to the Hamilton resolution in several important procedural respects. These include: (1) requiring at least two Members, including at least one minority party Member, to take deposition testimony rather than one Member or one staffer as the Hamilton resolution does; (2) requiring the task force to vote on subpoenas rather than delegating this authority to the chairman; (3) requiring a majority of Members to be present to close meetings or hearings as required by House rules, rather than permitting as few as two Members to do so, as the Hamilton resolution does; and (4) requiring the task force to abide by the same House Rules as other standing and select committees, rather than giving it special privileges and exemptions that might jeopardize the reputations of witnesses and of the House.

We have also proposed amendments (1) to make the composition of the task force completely bipartisan to remove the cloud of partisanship that hangs over this whole endeavor; and (2) to require to the maximum extent possible, that the House task force conduct joint hearings with its Senate counterpart subcommittee and share staff, information and resources.

Finally, we are especially skeptical about the wisdom and advisability of a further inquiry into allegations and rumors that are over a decade old given certain recent revelations that have come to light since we began looking into this in October. These include the inability of the GAO to substantiate or corroborate any of the allegations it was directed to investigate by a secret, partisan request from the chairman of the Government Operations Committee. The request was made without the approval, knowledge or participation of any other members of the Government Operations Committee or the subcommittee directly involved. The results of the GAO inquiry, eventually made public after persistent efforts of the House Republican leader questioning the partisan use of this non-partisan arm of the Congress, can best be summed up as chasing changing shadows down dry holes.

The minority has been refused in its attempt to call as a witness Mr. Frank Askin, a contract consultant to the Government Operations Committee who presumably has been looking into October Surprise allegations dating back to 1988 and also directed the GAO inquiry. One book quoted him as saying in 1988 that he had "substantial evidence" that the allegations were true. Yet no substantial evidence has been produced to the Rules Committee. Moreover, the Rules Committee, on a party-line vote, refused to subpoena Mr. Askin after he declined to voluntarily appear.

Secondly, two extensive investigative journalistic efforts by magazines not known for their conservative bias, came to the same conclusion as the GAO investigators—that the whole October Surprise conspiracy theory is pure myth and fantasy.

The New Republic, in a November 18, 1991, cover story entitled, "The Hunt for the October Surprise: The Conspiracy That Wasn't," includes the following conclusion:

"But the truth is, the conspiracy as currently postulated is a total fabrication. None of the evidence cited to support the October Surprise stands up to scrutiny. The key sources on whose word the story rests are documented frauds and impostors." (p. 16)

And the November 11, 1991, issue of Newsweek carries a similar cover story entitled, "Making of a Myth: The October Surprise: It Wasn't Treason, but a Conspiracy Theory Run Wild." That article contains the following conclusion:

"Newsweek has found, after a long investigation including interviews with government officials and other knowledgeable sources around the world, that the key claims of the purported eye witnesses and accusers simply do not hold up. What the evidence does show is the murky history of a conspiracy theory run wild." (pp. 18–19)

In short, the advocates of the October Surprise theory are spinning their conspiratorial webs out of cotton candy—90 percent hot air held together by 10 percent suspicious sticky-stuff.

While it is not our intention here to rehash all the details revealed in either the GAO investigation or the two magazine reports, we do have a responsibility to make a determination as to whether a further investigation into these wild allegations is even justified, and not just what the scope, authority and procedures of such a new inquiry should be.

According to one GAO official who briefed our committee, to do a thorough investigation into all the various allegations which have been made "would require something on the scale of the Iran-Contra inquiry." The House must ask itself at a time of burgeoning budget deficits and rapidly declining public confidence in the Congress whether it its prepared to spend millions of dollars more in poking around in decade-old rumors.

Is this really the way to convince the American people that Congress is expending its valuable time and taxpayer dollars in addressing our Nation's problems? Is this really the way to restore public confidence in its government? We think not, especially when the majority seems unwilling to launch a truly bipartisan investigation.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE HENRY B. GONZALEZ

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi). Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, there are many outstanding Members of Congress serving in this body right now but only a few giants left. One of those giants is Congressman HENRY B. GONZALEZ of San Antonio, TX. He is serving his 30th year in this body.

Last Monday, November 4, marks that 30th year. He was elected in 1961.

When one thinks of HENRY B. GONZALEZ what does one think of? You will be seeing him shortly deliver one of his trademark special orders. So when one thinks of HENRY GONZALEZ, one thinks of very special orders.

But there is an outstanding record of achievement in those 30 years. HENRY GONZALEZ started out as an Hispanic leader. Now he is a national leader, in health care, education, housing, and banking reform. All of those issues through 30 years HENRY GONZALEZ has touched, fighting for the little guy, fighting for the middle class, fighting for his constituents in San Antonio, who he goes back to see once a week to make sure that he not only talks to them every weekend, but mows his lawn on Saturday in his San Antonio home.

When one thinks of HENRY GONZALEZ, one thinks of the Kennedy assassination investigation. One thinks of the Gonzalez amendment that protected American companies overseas from being expropriated.

When one thinks of HENRY GONZALEZ, one learns about what he is trying to do to protect the taxpayer from bank bailouts, from banking irregularities, from S&L irregularities.

When one thinks of HENRY GONZALEZ, one thinks of integrity, of toughness, of compassion. When one thinks of HENRY GONZALEZ, one thinks of one of the most colorful men to serve in this body—not just his suits and ties but his character, his friendliness, his constant good humor.

Yes, he can be hot tempered, but it is always in the cause of being angry at some injustice or something erroneously said.

Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of tributes paid to individuals on this floor, but I think if we look back at those giants, the time has come to remember them not just because they have served their 30 years, but remember them for what they have done.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield to another younger Member of this body, whom I am sure reflects the view that I am stating today, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY].

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I thank the gentleman for taking this time.

Mr. Speaker, I have been privileged to serve with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] for 17 years in the House of Representatives. Of course, he comes from one of the most interesting parts of our country. San Antonio, TX, had before HENRY GONZALEZ a person like Maury Maverick, whom he followed richly in the tradition of being concerned almost to a single-minded degree about the plight of people who no one cares about, about poor campesinos, about people who have no representation here.

To me the great gift of serving with HENRY GONZALEZ is that he reminds me and all of us that people out in this country who do not have much, who only want a fair shake from their Government, have a true champion—and that champion is fortunately the chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs—to make sure that they toe the line as well, the big powerful interests in this country.

As long as there are powerful interests, as long as there are people who are comfortable, there will be a HENRY GONZALEZ to afflict them, and thank God for him.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague.

I would just like to remind everyone here HENRY GONZALEZ is 75 years old. We will be celebrating his 60th year in Congress 30 years from now.

I want to make an announcement: I will not be here to make this special accolade then, but HENRY GONZALEZ will be here, because he is healthy, he is strong, he is getting younger every day, and the little guy, the middle class, will have their champion another 30 years.

H.R. 2094—NOW IT'S THE PUBLIC'S TURN

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi). Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, at the outset let me say that I am overwhelmed by my good friends who have just spoken. I had no idea that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], much less the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY], would be saying such fine things. I think these are the rewards that in a democracy one is very fortunate to receive.

I have never felt that in a democracy such as ours, based on a representative form of government, that any one of us attempting to be a Representative, and it is always a challenge, I think it is something that like perfection, which we are striving to reach, knowing we never will quite reach it, but at least we should keep on trying. And that is to try to represent without fear of favor equally and all, regardless of the status in our society, those that are charged with being constituents in the districts that we are honored and privileged to represent.

I do not have the words with which to express my profound and sincere thanks to the gentleman from New Mexico, Congressman RICHARDSON, and the gentleman from New York, Congressman DOWNEY. I would just say that these are the real moments of reward that I feel make it all worthwhile.

I do not think that in a democracy one should expect monuments, one should expect gratitude necessarily for doing one's duty. That is what the people have elected us in free, open, democratic, unrestrained circumstances and under the institutions of freedom that we have inherited. And it has always been my feeling of profound gratitude that I could be the beneficiary of the inheritance and that nothing I would ever do would diminish by one iota the transmittal of that inheritance to those who would follow me.

Mr. Speaker, we are all hopeful that the house will be able to successfully complete work on major banking legislation next week. It has been a rough 2 weeks for the House, as it has attempted to move an omnibus package. Competing interests have attacked the efforts from every angle. We have got to look at it this way. It is to be expected. Any time we have $1 trillion or more involved laying on that table, we are going to have a lot of interests and they are going to reflect their interests in the deliberations that take place anywhere in or out of this great body or in those areas of decisionmaking that can have some impact on those trillion dollars or so.

The lobbyists have taken an all-or-nothing attitude and at the moment the result has been a true nothing. After the administration's omnibus package was overwhelmingly defeated, and when it was introduced and sent over by the Secretary of the Treasury, there were those who said "Oh, the Banking Committee, they are not going to consider it. Those Democrats in the majority are going to try to sidetrack it."

Secretary Brady himself, in person, came over to the House. Let me explain to my colleagues, I have never met in private to work any deals with anybody. The position I have taken when I have been requested to do so is that I am just the chairman of the committee and I cannot speak for the majority of that committee until they have been brought in their consultation. And I have tried to do that to the best of my ability.

I have been invited to go to other places, including the White House, to discuss possible legislative arrangements. I have not gone. Other Members have gone, but I have not.

My answer is, my door is open in my office that the people provide. It is open to all comers, from the Cabinet level, the Presidential level, down to just the poorest constituent at any time. Assuming I am not otherwise occupied in legislative business, I will be there and I will discuss legislative business here in the Hall of the House or in the premises of the House where we are supposed to, but nowhere else.

Now, this has been bothersome to people who have been accustomed to working in a different manner in the preceding years. I cannot help that. So when the Secretary spoke to me in May, he was surprised when I told him that I was going to follow regular order and that the bill, once it was referred to the committee by the Speaker, Parliamentarian, I would in turn refer it to the subcommittee that has jurisdiction, which is the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions and Supervision, chaired by my very able colleague, the ranking majority member of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, Congressman FRANK ANNUNZIO.

Furthermore, I explained and requested to the subcommittee chairman, and I mentioned this to the Secretary to his surprise, that the markup vehicle should not be the bill that I had introduced on the first day of the session of this Congress on January 3, not a subsequent bill introduced jointly by the gentleman from Illinois, Congressman ANNUNZIO, and myself, but the Treasury bill as the vehicle for markup in the subcommittee. And that is what they used.

I warned the Secretary and I said, "Mr. Secretary, you realize that this bill as you have gotten it, it is a hodgepodge of industry wish lists. We have at least four to five sections in this bill you have sent us that we are going to have to share under the system that prevails in the House with four other committees, at least in what is known as sequential referral."

He did not seem to understand. So I explained further. I said, "In the Senate, unlike the House, the Senate Banking Committee has total jurisdiction. It doesn't have to refer anything else on the bill before it to any other committee of the Senate. But unlike the House, in the House we have what is known as sequential referral, and it is good because it recognizes the integrity of the processes and the integrity of jurisdiction of every committee that is charged with jurisdiction over the subject matter under discussion."

I have no quarrel with that. It has worked out fine. I have had any number of bills since I have been chairman of the House subcommittee since 1981, and then of course some of the substantial legislation since I have been chairman of the full Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. We have had referrals to other committees. They have worked out. I have the highest esteem for my colleagues who happen to be chairmen of the committees. I have nothing but high respect and regard, have always.

I certainly think that had it not been for the rather old pact understanding on the part of the Secretary, we would have had better results.

He said, "Well, I'm really surprised but that is good." And of course, the rest is history.

Now, the omnibus package that we received from the administration was defeated overwhelmingly last Monday night, immediately, and I had foreseen that in May. I offered committee options. I offered the Secretary, advising him that since the bank insurance fund is in some distress that that had to have priority and that if this massive document he had, with all of the variegated interests involved bogged down, we would be in here.

I said September. Well, it is November, and in the meanwhile, we would have this other big gigantic problem of the refunding of the RTC, the Resolution Trust Corporation. And up to this week, the last figure I heard that they are requesting, and they have admitted they have not been able to resolve some of the defunct S&L's because they do not have the money in RTC, they are requesting $70 billion.

I could not think of anything worse for us than to be hit simultaneously by both gigantic demands.

Bogged down, we would be in here I said September. Well, it is November and that is what has happened. Unfortunately, I could not convince either leadership or administration or the spokesmen or much of the committee, but I gave the choice. I said that the gentleman from Illinois, Chairman ANNUNZIO, and I have in the meanwhile arranged a leaner package, but very substantial. Some people said "It is very narrow." It is far from that, and I am going to go into that in a few minutes. The rest is history.

We were prepared when the House acted as it did Monday. By Tuesday we took the standby bill, polished it up, put it in, and on Wednesday I called a hearing of the committee and we marked it up and passed it out Wednesday morning, and it is now in the hands of the leadership and the Committee on Rules. But as far as our forum, known as the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, we have done our duty. We have passed the bill.

While H.R. 2094 has been described as a narrow bill, it contains a major set of regulatory reforms, among other things. It provides authority for the bank insurance fund to borrow up to $30 billion from the U.S. Treasury, the funds to be repaid by premiums by the industry. This is not a taxpayers' bailout. Traditionally, all we are doing is changing the traditional $5 billion line of credit from the Treasury to the FDIC or the bank insurance fund from $5 to $30 billion which then will enable them to make use of an additional $40 billion from the sale of the assets of the institutions they have resolved, but it is to be paid back on the basis of amortization that will be set by Treasury and the FDIC or the banking industry. The FDIC is the banking industry's insurance fund paid for through premiums and fees by the insurance industry, and that is who will have to pay that back.

Second, it requires annual onsite examinations and annual audits. Third, it requires improved internal controls for banks. Fourth, it requires that regulators get in and take action when the condition of an institution deteriorates. This eliminates the present practice of letting institutions rot away and become wrecks with no salvage value. Fifth, it requires that the FDIC use a method least costly to the taxpayers in resolving failed institutions "too big to fail." It establishes criteria for the use of the discount window of the Federal Reserve and curbs the use of the window for secret bailouts of banks, which we have exposed and the staff of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs has exposed. Seventh, it requires data on small business lending including lending for minority business on banks' condition reports.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2094 was reported out of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs on a 37-to-15 vote. The committee recognized the critical need to make certain that the insurance fund is kept solvent and that we do not allow the Federal Government to renege on its pledge to pay off depositors of failed banks. This is the issue. Confidence in the banking industry is fragile, very fragile. Any delay in refunding the BIF or any suggestion that the Congress will debate endlessly without action is certain to erode continuously and further that confidence.

It is difficult to measure confidence but it is clearly the basic fuel that keeps the entire banking system going, and my friends, it is fragile. When it slips away it is gone, extremely difficult to get back, like credibility, in our case, and good reputation. Once it is shattered, once it is cracked it is gone, difficult if ever to be able to recover.

We cannot afford to make that gamble. I have been saying this now for 2 years. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, so much of the debate over the past 2 weeks, and in reality the entire year, has centered on the other issues in banking: Who could own banks, who could peddle insurance, who could sell securities.

Sure, those are wonderful issues. They are issues dear to a multitude of interest groups and to the U.S. Treasury Department. But for our constituents, for the overwhelming majority, the real concern centers on the safety and soundness of the banking system and on the assurance that deposits will be protected by that insurance fund. How many people in your district, my colleagues, really care whether their banks can sell securities? But I can guarantee the Members that 100 percent of them are going to make sure that their hard-earned dollars are safe.

I am also convinced that they want a safe and sound banking system that will not become a part of the State bank welfare cases to be paid for by the taxpayers. The American people have had enough of financial bailouts with the savings and loan industry. They do not want to set the stage for another disaster for the banking system and the bank insurance fund.

H.R. 2094 does shore up the banking fund. Most important, it provides new regulatory initiatives that will go a long way toward preventing a repeat of the savings and loan mess.

Mr. Speaker, the shock waves are still coming in from Monday's vote against the administration's bill to allow banks to expand into securities activities and to build nationwide networks or branches. Both the administration and the banking industry turned against the legislation after the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs and the Committee on Energy and Commerce insisted on safeguards for the public and for the insurance fund.

I am pleased that a majority of the House voted in favor of the safeguards and against giving banks new powers without protection. But in the end, the industry said thumbs down when they realized they could not pry the safeguards off of the power package.

Mr. Speaker, there are still some in the House who want to give the industry another bite at that apple to try a package of amendments that would allow geographical and product expansion for the banks without safeguards. They would like to pack these amendments onto H.R. 2094. Mr. Speaker, I think such moves will only serve to ensnarl badly needed legislation in an impossible thicket. It will only serve to delay refunding BIF and postpone the installation of new regulatory tools. Such amendments gamble with the public's confidence in the banking system and its regulatory machinery.

The lobbyists are all over town. The hotels have been filled with bank, insurance, and securities lobbyists. The law firms have been on red alert to help their clients with a welter of special interest amendments. Place any of these controversial amendments before the House next week and the battle begins all over again, and with no certain winners. Such a development, however, would come up with one certain loser: the American public.

Mr. Speaker, the banking industry and the Treasury Department missed the boat last week. They had their opportunity to take a bill, perhaps a bill not entirely to their liking but a bill that would have provided them new powers and new markets. It is amazing that the Treasury Department and the industry thought they could dictate every detail of the legislation to the House.

The legislation, contrary to bank propaganda, did provide the banks with greater opportunities in the securities field. We did insist on safeguards and this fact alone caused them to scuttle the entire package. Just a little bit of accountability and no sir, they would rather go along with what they have now and get it from the courts or from the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. Speaker, a few years ago the industry would have taken such a package, powers with safeguards, and would have been happy. We all know that. The industry knows that, but now the appetite is bigger and they want everything, power without safeguards.

Unfortunately, the Secretary of the Treasury failed to sit down with the banks and explain the need for public safeguards. Instead, the Secretary tried to outdo the banks with industry wish lists and pushed away safeguards at every turn.

The Treasury Department, I will remind the Secretary and my colleagues, is a part of the U.S. Government, and it is tax supported. It has a responsibility to speak up for the public interest and not just the bank interests on this legislation.

I will remind my colleagues of a very famous Coloradan back during the Depression, Senator Costigan, who would get up in the Senate and say, "I believe in the public ownership of the Government." That is the issue. And here is the Treasury acting as an agent for the private industry, and had the Bush administration met its responsibility to the public and had they done it, both the banks and the administration would have fared much better in last weeks' vote.

Mr. Speaker, I know that many will have favored amendments before the Committee on Rules next week. I have a whole list of them, but I am not going to offer them, because I believe that it is essential that we proceed with this bill, that we pass it out of the committee, safeguard the integrity of the action of the overwhelming members of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs this last Wednesday.

Now is the time for restraint, not another reaching into the grab bags of the special interests. If amendments are considered on interstate or securities powers, we must, again, speak up for the public safeguards. We also must face the fact that community groups and consumer organizations have legitimate requests before us for public safeguards. This cannot be a one-way street for the banks.

Many have raised serious and documented concerns about what will happen to local communities in this new world of banking. The Community Investment Act is already weak and poorly enforced. We cannot weaken it further without great damage to our communities, particularly minority and low- and moderate-income neighborhoods. That is everybody, not just minorities.

This bill cannot be for banks alone.

The release last month of data collected under the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act shows wide patterns of discriminatory lending across the country by commercial banks. This information is still filtering out to communities, and ultimately we are going to see a big fallout from these things.

These banks enjoy great grants of Government benefits. The bankers are the most privileged group in our country. Under our fractional reserve system, they, not the Congress, manufacture credit and money. They are the most privileged, and they are not satisfied. They want it all.

Since when have Congresses become so abject and would abdicate the tremendous constitutional duties and responsibilities to the people and the greatest interests of the greatest number?

I have confidence that my colleagues will not let that happen and that we will have learned by now and will be going ahead and honor the integrity of action of the overwhelming majority of members of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs last Wednesday.

Mr. Speaker, I hope we will move swiftly next week to deal with the essential problems before us, keeping the insurance fund solvent, making certain that we have good, workable, and strong regulatory tools available. Down the road we can deal with these wish lists of expansion after we have had suitable hearings, I mean, really good hearings, and next time perhaps we can get help from the administration in speaking up for the public side of these issues, and perhaps we will be in a position then to make certain that the banks who seek these new benefits and privileges are willing to serve all the people regardless of color, ethnic background, race, or sex.

We have had our bloodbath on the floor this week. Enough is enough. Let us do the people's business next week.

THE COURSE OF AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for a special order today because there are some things going on in this country and around the world that ought to cause us to be very apprehensive, and ought to cause us to decide to take some action as Americans.

This House of Representatives has been under relentless attack in recent months. It has been called stupid and corrupt by some people, including some Members on the floor of the House of Representatives. It's been attacked by virtually everybody that likes to attack institutions, and yet that is not new. Congress has been under attack for a couple of hundred years. It is a kind of fragile institution in a lot of ways. It is easy to attack.

I have served in the House of Representatives for 11 years. I serve with some Republicans and Democrats who, I think, are very hard working people that I know try to do the best job they can for this country. They are not corrupt. They are not stupid. They are not here because their only interest is to get reelected. In most cases, they have a very serious desire to be involved in public policy questions and want this country to progress, to move ahead and to prosper. They come from all parts of the country. And generally, I think that their motives cannot be challenged, and as I said, they work very, very hard.

Now, I am the first to admit that this institution certainly has lots of trouble, and we do not always make the right decisions. We do not always make the decisions we should on time, and Lord knows we certainly deserve some criticism, but not the kind of criticism that suggests the motives of everyone here are all wrong. I think these men and women have good motives, who come from all parts of this country, who represent the interests of this country.

I come from a town of 350 people. That is where I spent my youth. I graduated in a high school class of nine in southwestern North Dakota.

People in my hometown worked hard, and helped each other. When they wanted to buy something, there was still a notion that you should save up for it. Those were the days when I was growing up in a small community.

The people in that town had an enormous amount of interest in sacrificing themselves for the interests of their children. They were very interested in keeping a school open in that small town, and making sure it was a good school.

We had a doctor named Doc Hill. He came to Regent and stayed for 55 years. In rain and sleet and snow he traveled all across the countryside to deliver babies, to pull teeth, to do whatever was required of a doctor who was the only health care professional around.

My father ran a petroleum dealership. We raised horses and cattle. It was not unusual at 3 or 4 in the morning to get a call that someone's pig barn was out of propane 15 miles north of town. In a blizzard, he'd get the propane truck and wake me up, and we would go deliver propane. You have to keep a hog barn heated when they are farrowing.

It is the sort of thing we did. When Ernest Whelan died, the neighbors put the crop in and took the crop off. When a barn burned down, folks came and brought their tools and supplies and helped build the neighbor's barn. That was my hometown's way.

It was something else that was interesting back then. Every day of my life, I understood from everything I saw and heard and knew that this country was No. 1. This country was the best. We were the most powerful, the wealthiest, and were experiencing the greatest rate of economic growth. We did things right, and invested in education. This country was No. 1, a world economic power.

Yes, they were simpler times back then, in a lot of ways when it was clear who was No. 1. We had been blessed with enormous bountiful fruits of our labor and our resources. This country was head and shoulders above the rest of the countries in the world as an economic power, and then during that time and later as a military superpower.

Well, I have a 4½-year-old son who this morning went off to day school, the year before kindergarten, and as he went off to school today, he did not know and will not know tonight when he gets home, nor will his schoolmates or other children around the world, that this country is off course.

It is a ship of state that is drifting. Things are not working right. Today, while my son is at school, this Government will spend $1¼ billion—that is with a "b"—that we do not have.

Today, tomorrow, every day, 7 days a week, all year in this fiscal year, this Government will spend $1¼ billion that it does not take in in revenues and charge it to the kids and the grandkids.

Now, how did we come to that position? Is it not still a great country? Sure. Is it not still a country with a strong economy? Yes. Are we still a military superpower? Sure. But are we headed for very serious trouble? You better believe it.

Frankly, I do not think a lot of people in this town and around the country understand the peril that faces this country. We must decide to do the right things, tough as they might be, to set this country back on track and help America grow again.

I would like to mention a couple things that have led us to this point and then talk about what we ought to do to respond.

First of all, just to put it all in perspective, a century ago power shifted in this world. England was the world economic power, and it shifted from England to the United States. No one saw it shift. There was not some smart journalist who wrote an op-ed piece someplace in the London tabloids that said it happened, the boat left with power on it and it is going to dock in New York soon. It doesn't happen that way. Power shifted, and the United States became a world economic power. And now it is shifting again today for a lot of reasons. Some are watching it shift and not willing to do much about it, even though we could. It is shifting from here to the Pacific rim.

The question of what kind of public policies we pursue, what kind of courage we have as Americans, what kind of leadership we have in the White House, what kind of courage we have in Congress to follow good leadership, the answer to those questions will determine what kind of a country we have 10 years, 20 years, and 50 years from now.

This country is losing its edge and is off track. We are beset with deficits and debt, recession, scandal, and collapse in key industries. The ship of state is loaded with debt, and my colleagues and others say let us have a growth package. Let us propel this ship of state once again.

You cannot propel a ship that is loaded. You have got to lighten the load. We have got to deal with this debt problem. We have got to put this country back on track by facing squarely the issues that we would face if we were in a small town. We would understand if we were in a small town and this was our community what we would have to do. We would have to set things right and get back to fundamentals. You have to pay your bills.

We have had some discussion earlier today in the 1-minutes about President Bush. One of the things, I am a Democrat and I am a Democrat because I believe in the basic values that we stand and fight for. But one of the things I find interesting about the last 11 years is when Ronald Reagan came to the Presidency and George Bush followed him, every single thing that happened around this town and in this country that was right, that was good, and that worked, they claim was as a result of policies and actions initiated by Republicans. This they would trumpet as a Republican success as long as it worked.

On the other hand, every single thing that fails and goes wrong, anything that is haywire. they point to the Democrats and say, "That is your responsibility. You caused that. We weren't even here. It's not our fault. We wash our hands."

President Reagan came to town and said, "I have a new vision. We will cut taxes, double the defense budget, and balance the budget." Well, it did not work. We have deficits after deficits.

Some say, well, that is not President Reagan's fault. President Reagan cannot spend money. Well, the first step in the three-step budget process is that by law the President sends a budget to this Congress.

Does anybody here know what kind of deficits the most conservative President in this century asked for? President Reagan—not Millard Fillmore, not Jimmy Carter—President Reagan requested a trillion dollars in deficits, and you bet Congress failed. Our failure was to follow leadership that was reckless and dangerous in the area of fiscal policy, and that leadership continues. The budgets that come to this Congress from the President are budgets that request enormous deficits, and Congress does not have the guts apparently to say no.

We ought to send them back and say, "Send one that is balanced and then we will talk."

There are three steps to the budget process, and the process by which you spend money. First, the President sends a budget.

Second, Congress reacts by passing appropriations bills, and third, the President signs or vetoes the bill and that signature is worth two-thirds of all the votes here in the House and in the Senate. So when they say that these deficits are not the President's fault, that is nonsense. It is his fault because he initiates it and it is the fault of Congress because we followed that leadership.

For 11 years we have had conservatives in the White House who talk about balanced budgets and send to this Congress proposals for deficits that are the biggest in the history of this country. We could put them out here around the table today, if anybody wants proof, and say here is his budget for 1989, here is his budget for 1990, and you would see the deficits that this President requested.

Now, there is talk today about letting us start worrying about things here at home. Someone said, well, that is not fair. When the President travels, he travels in this country's interests.

I will be the first to credit President Bush with some enormous successes internationally. I will be the first to say to him that he deserves to be congratulated, and I have said that from this microphone and this well. I think he has done a superb job in some areas in international affairs, not all, but some, and I have said congratulations.

But I tell you there is a tendency down at the White House to think it is really interesting to be involved in foreign affairs and it is pretty dull and not very interesting to be involved in domestic affairs. The people of this country that I represent in my home and the State that I represent want a President who is far more interested in what is happening in Bismarck, ND, and Boston, MA, and St. George, UT, than they are about a President traveling to Japan, Italy, or Germany. That is not to suggest that we should be isolationists and withdraw from the world. It is to suggest that we have serious problems in this country and it is time to park Air Force One and take care of things here at home.

The President has a brand new 747 that has 330,000 miles on it. He has traveled the equivalent of three times around the equator since he took office, visited 32 countries, and there is not anybody who asks him for anything around the world that he does not say, "absolutely."

Egypt wants $7 billion of debt forgiven, no problem. That is not a problem. "We will forgive your debt. Spend it all, $42 million. We will forgive your debt." Thirty countries have had debt forgiveness just in the last year and a half. That is not a problem. Foreign aid, the more the merrier, he says.

A lot of people are starting to wonder if the priorities should not be that this country is in trouble. This country has a President of the United States, and that means a President of this country who needs to pay attention to problems here at home. He should get and demand and expect a Congress that follows courageous leadership on these issues.

Let me just go through a list, if I might, of some of the things that we can, and I think should, do to respond to these issues.

First, the easiest recommendation by any of us who serve here, and I think by the President, is we have got to pay our bills. We cannot keep charging. We cannot have a $4 trillion debt. It is actually about $3.6 trillion at this point, but the deficit this year is going to be about $420 billion. We have simply got to pay our bills.

How do you do that? First, you stop forgiving everybody's debt. Why should we forgive debts for every country that asks?

Second, we have to cut some spending. Yes, the Federal Government is bloated, absolutely, even here in Congress. But you go downtown to some of these agencies, and I am telling you that they have got too many people working there. Let us cut some Federal employment. Let us cut programs that do not work.

Let us ask people who are not paying taxes to start paying them. Nothing wrong with asking rich folks to pay their share; there is nothing wrong with that at all. We have got to deal with the budget deficit.

And is that hard? You bet it is tough, because it is not good news to tell people you have to have a cut in programs or a cut in spending or to tell people you might have to pay some extra taxes, yet, we have to do what is necessary to stop the deficits and stop the hemorrhaging; to put this country back on track is to do what the American people demand and expect of their leaders.

The second point is this country has got to stop paying for everybody else's defense bills. We pay over a $100 billion to defend our allies. Why should the American taxpayer pay for the defense umbrella to defend a free world? We borrow money from Japan because that is who is lending the money to help finance our deficit in order to protect France against an invasion from Poland. I mean, the whole place is goofy, for God's sake.

Let us tell Japan, let us tell Germany, let us tell France and others, "We love you. You are great friends of ours. You have a certain responsibility to pay for defending the free world. Here it is. Send us a check. We have the captains and the cruisers and the air carriers out there keeping the sealanes open so you can ship your Hondas to Pittsburgh. God bless you, but send us a check for the amount of money we spent to keep the free world free."

We cannot afford to spend $100 billion a year of American taxpayers' dollars to add to the debt so our kids will be required to pay off the debt so that we can defend Germany, France, and Japan. That is nuts, and it is time to stop it.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

□ 1110

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman's point, we just saw yesterday on the nightly news the President pleading with the Europeans for us to maintain this role, a role that was designed when there was a danger of a united Soviet Union invading West Germany, and then the rest of Europe. The President goes over there, the worst of all negotiations, doing the opposite of what the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], the gentleman in the well, suggested.

"You want us to stay in? Pay us for some of the costs of protecting freedom, or else we're going home."

The President takes a different tack. He runs over there and says, "Please let us stay." The French, the Germans, and the English are ready to take on, I think, more of their own responsibilities, and the worst of it is we recognize that we cannot intervene when it comes to Yugoslavia. The administration, I think, understands that sending American troops into Yugoslavia is not going to solve the situation, that the Europeans have got to do it. Yet, as the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] points out, what the administration wants to do is keep spending about $140, $150 billion a year, and what does that mean?

It means: "If you're a 55-year-old in Germany, and you get laid off, you got something like 130 weeks of unemployment compensation. In North Dakota or Connecticut you're just out of luck if you've run out of your present benefits."

Mr. Speaker, every one of those European countries has national health care, maternal and parental leaves, better unemployment benefits. Do my colleagues know why they can afford it? Because we are subsidizing their countries, and the most insane part, of course, is that we then borrow the money from them so we can afford to both defend them and try to keep our own country running.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON] makes a great point. With respect to Europe, until about a year ago we had about 300,000 troops in Europe, and we hired about 200,000 civilians in Europe as well. So, we had 500,000 Americans on a jobs program in Europe. That's a jobs program we could well use in America, but we are paying for it in Europe because that is the way it always was, that is the way it is, and, if the President has his way, that is the way it will always be.

Mr. Speaker, that is crazy, and it's time to change all of that. It is time to reorder priorities, not to withdraw from the world, but simply to tell others, "Shrewd, tough, smart competitors, you have to pay your way. Part of your obligation in this world is to help Uncle Sam pay for the world's defense umbrella to keep the Free World free."

I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, if we could just get those 275,000–300,000 Americans back here in the United States, if we did not lay them off, if we continue to pay their salaries, but we housed them in some of the empty apartment buildings and houses we have in this country, we would fix the real estate crisis. But no. What we are doing is we are taking money that we borrow from the Germans at 7 or 8 percent, then we send it to our troops over in Europe, they take that money, and they pay rent on an apartment or house in Europe. They buy groceries in a store in Germany, or wherever they are. They end up buying at their department stores and keeping those economies going rather than using that money here to keep our economy going.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment that I put on the defense bill that is now being kept in conference. It is going to come back and go to the President for signature. It does something that is very simple. It says the President is required to negotiate with our allies, offset payments to us that represent the cost of our defending them, and we set up a specific amount in the Department of Defense to receive the money.

Now, we found out during the Desert Storm situation that, when the President and James Baker, the Secretary of State, want to do a little shuttle diplomacy and go collecting money, they can do a pretty good job. They raised $45–$48 billion. Every year we ought to be getting tens of billions of dollars into this country's coffers from those for whom we are now providing a defense. It is simply a matter of will.

Mr. Speaker, if I have my way, I hope we can force the President to negotiate those kinds of payments with our allies because this country cannot afford it. This country is in serious economic trouble, and we have got to put a stop to that sort of thing.

I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with helping out our neighbors, one, if we have the financial ability to do so and if our neighbor is in some real trouble. I think that is something the United States has always been ready to do. But this situation is the single threat that everybody was focused on, is in the process of dissolving, and is dissolved. They have got a better and healthier economy in Western Europe than we do, and we are constantly giving this transfer of funds, and these people are our primary economic competitors. It is as if General Motors and Ford were trying to sell cars in the American market, which sometimes they appear to be, but not always, and periodically General Motors would send another billion dollars over to Ford. It would probably give Ford some advantage.

Mr. Speaker, that is what we do to Germany. The reason the Germans have better health care, a better education system, and are beating the pants off us economically is because we are constantly subsidizing their economy.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY].

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] for yielding, and I would like to associate myself with his fine comments and just point out, and I think the gentleman has alluded to this fact, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON] has as well; the world has fundamentally changed since 1989 in ways that have apparently eluded this administration. There was a revolution, and that revolution was unlike the gentleman's point about the shifting of economic tide. It is trumpeted across the world.

The fact is the Soviet Union was paid by one of our principal allies, the Germans, $8 billion to move soldiers from Europe, Soviet soldiers from Europe, back to the Soviet Union. So, there is already a lifeline, a flood, if my colleague will, of foreign aid going from European countries to their former adversaries and our former adversaries, the Soviet Union.

If this administration continues to insist, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON] pointed out, as the President did from Rome the other day, that somehow the old Atlantic structure, a structure of NATO, is so sacrosanct, so important, that we cannot possibly rethink it for fear that there will be instability, well, the greatest instability that I know, and I would like the gentleman to comment upon this, is economic instability, because the threat of economic instability is a far greater danger in the United States than the potential for an invasion of the Soviet Union back into the Eastern European countries where it once held suzerainty, but clearly this President, and I hope when he comes back from this recent trip, will appreciate that the American people cannot afford any longer to keep the European structure, the NATO structure, alive while the American economy fails.

Mr. Speaker, it simply cannot be done.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, it reminds us of the military response of the French after World War I. They built the Maginot Line, and the Israelis built the Barlev Line after the 1967 war, and we are ready for world war III. We are ready for the fight with the Soviets, and what we are not ready for is this fight with our economic competitors, and it is a much different world if we do not have the resources to invest. Just as the Maginot Line was overridden in World War II, we will be overridden economically, and then we will no longer be able to lead the world for human rights and for all the things that America has done for decades We will not be able to be that shining example of freedom and an economy that can sustain freedom.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON] is absolutely correct, and I mentioned burden sharing, the question of how much we pay for the free world's defense and the requirement that others begin to share fairly in that because that is an important part of this deficit issue, as far as I am concerned.

And the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] talked about the security threat. By far the greatest security threat to this country at this moment is the perilous condition of our economy and the need to put this country back on track and if we fail to do that at this point, then, 10 and 20 years from now we will look back at this time and say that this country came to a critical juncture and did not have the leadership, the political will, or guts to do what was necessary to make it a great country again.

Mr. Speaker, we have got to make this country grow again. But as I said before, it is awfully hard to put new fuel into the ship to propel that ship when it is loaded with debt. We have got to lighten the load as well, and I wanted to mention today, and I hope we will before the end of the hour, the issue of international trade, where we are shipping out used paper in wood ships and bringing back television sets and cars and finding markets closed to us when our markets are open to them. That is an issue we have got to deal with.

We have got to deal with still this issue of leveraged buyouts, hostile takeovers, and junk bonds and this greed game, the economic casino that is going on in parts of this country that is, in my judgment, ruining the private sector in this country while regulators sleep in this town.

These are regulators hired by a President who has said, in my judgment, "I don't want to govern. I don't like government very much." That started with Ronald Reagan. He said that government is the problem.

So we are going to bring people into key regulatory positions whose position and whose judgment is to not regulate. That basically happens in the area of hostile takeovers and in the airlines and the whole area. So what do we have? We have people playing these little greed games, and we have this infection of hostile takeovers in this country, and a blizzard of junk bonds that has sprung up in a form of economic cannibalism that has weakened this country from the inside. We have seen, partly as a result of that, the collapse of institutions, S&L's that bought all these junk bonds, and we have seen failures of companies that were the targets.

Then what happened? We were doing all that because regulators failed to regulate, and in my judgment they were almost criminally irresponsible. While this was happening, our competitors were figuring out how to build better products and sell them at a better price.

You could not do a hostile takeover in Japan because they will not allow it. Do you know why? Because they know it does not make a darned bit of sense.

What are they involved in in their private sector? Building better products and figuring out how to sell them at a better price.

What are all the folks on Wall Street and many in our boardrooms doing? Trying to figure out how to take over somebody else or how to avoid being taken over. They are spending precious little time figuring out how to compete and how to win when we compete with shrewd, tough international competitors like the Japanese, the Germans, and the French.

One of the things we ought to do is simply flatout make illegal hostile takeovers. We should stop the junk bond craze, and put an end to this loading corporations up with debt for personal gain, which has been going on for too long. We should just end it.

I will bet there are not very many Members who know that the U.S. Government ended up owning junk bonds in the Taj Mahal. This is the Taj Mahal that Donald Trump built, the biggest, glitziest, costliest casino in the world over in Atlantic City. It had jewels all over it. The question was: Was Marla Maples going to come to the grand opening? Who cared? It opened, and now it is broke.

The junk bonds that were used to finance the building of the Taj Mahal ended up in the bowels of the Federal Government. Do you know how? Because the S&L that bought some of the junk bonds failed. We had to take over the S&L, and U.S. taxpayers ended up with junk bonds in the Taj Mahal.

I cannot think of a more grotesque definition of systematic failure by these folks who were supposed to be regulating this sort of thing than to say that we ended up, as a result of this incompetence, with junk bonds from the Taj Mahal being owned by the American taxpayer. It is time to end that sort of thing.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, do the American taxpayers get some kind of a break if they go back to the Taj Mahal as a result of this? Is the gentleman aware of that, or is it just that we get to own the bonds?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Does the gentleman have a weekend trip planned?

Mr. DOWNEY. No, I do not, but I was just wondering about it. I know the gentleman is not a big fan of the Taj Mahal.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Let me give the gentleman another choice. It is not just the Taj Mahal. The American taxpayer also got stuck with junk bonds from Caesar's, Bally's, and Resorts International. So just take your choice of casinos if you want to travel this weekend.

Mr. DOWNEY. So taxpayers could just walk into these casinos and say, "Look, I own a part of you. I am an investor, and I would like the privileges of being an investor."

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. It probably would not work to try to do that. But incidentally the RTC, the Resolution Trust Corporation, has now sold the junk bonds from the Taj Mahal. I have been trying to find out what price they got for them, who bought them, and who helped with the sale.

Mr. DOWNEY. Has the gentleman been able to find out?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. No; the Resolution Trust Corporation would not trust Members of Congress and would not trust the American people to get that kind of information because they say it is confidential. When the RTC bill comes to the floor, we are going to have a long discussion about that.

Interestingly enough, they have a firm that helped issue some of the junk bonds that is now under contract to help them sell the junk bonds and that is also on the other end buying some of the junk bonds. That is one of the reasons I wanted to find out what they were getting for the Taj Mahal bonds.

Mr. DOWNEY. So they get fees at both ends of the game?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Yes; the whole thing has been fee driven. That is why people who have not yet gotten rid of their acne and are just out of college are making a half million dollars a year doing these kinds of things. They are not building America, they are ruining America, but they are getting rich.

Maybe this house of cards has finally begun to collapse because in the last couple of years we have begun to see a number of these takeover artists doing 2 years of hard tennis at some minimum security prisons for their indiscretions. Maybe this house of cards is beginning to collapse. But if it does not and if it has not and we still see evidence of people who want to do these deals, I think it is incumbent on Congress to say, "Enough." What we ought to do in the private sector is build better products, not buy and sell each other. We should say, "No more scavenging, No more of these greed games. Let's stop it."

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, the problem, of course, is that the White House, the executive in our system of government, has so much of the regulatory control, with the decisions on enforcement, that makes it very difficult here in the Congress to contain some of this.

I remember waking up one day and finding out that the NRC decided it was going to deregulate certain kinds of nuclear waste. They called it low-level radioactive waste, and it could go into each of the landfills around the country. I know the landfills in my State never had the kind of expertise at the entrance to find out whether it was above or below radioactive waste.

The gentleman mentioned agriculture. I remember once discussing this with some trade folks from Japan. I said, "You know, you are beating us in electronics and television. Our farmers are pretty good. How about taking our agricultural products?"

They said, "Oh, no, we can't do that because that would create a political problem in Japan. You see, we don't have reapportionment."

So the majority party has overrepresentation in their parliamant, and that majority party has even a greater percentage of its representation coming from agricultural districts. So they said, "We're sorry, we can't let your agricultural products in."

I said, "I come from Connecticut, and we have got insurance companies that are pretty capable. How about letting some of our insurance companies go in there and try to compete?"

At that time even our banks were stronger, but now the biggest banks are Japanese.

They said, "Oh, no, we can't let your banks in and we can't let your insurance companies in because ours are yet in a very early stage of development."

Well, they protected theirs, and now they are gobbling up ours.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the Golden Rule of trade. I am not one who is protectionist, but I believe in protecting America. I think our markets ought to be open. But I also think we ought to say to other countries, "Listen carefully. It has got to be two way. America's markets are open to you, but we are going to treat you like you treat us. So be careful. Open your markets to American workers and American producers. If you don't, you are not going to find our markets soaking up all of your goods."

This is interesting. First of all, the gentleman mentioned farming. We need a decent farm program. That would be easy to do if we had an administration that cared. We could do a farm program that saves family farmers. But part of the farm program is a trade system that works, and our trade policies are bankrupt.

We cannot get rice into Japan. They did this negotiation with Japan on beef. We have all these Japanese products coming in, and that is fine. I am not opposed to that, but we cannot get enough beef into Japan. They want cheeseburgers in Tokyo and T-bones in Tokyo, but it costs $29 a pound for T-bones in Tokyo. Why? They do not have enough beef, and we want to get more beef into Tokyo, but they have all these barriers. So we have this negotiation. Our fearless trade negotiators go to Tokyo and negotiate for a couple of years. Then they finish their negotiations, and do you know what? It is all on the front pages. They made a deal, and they trumpeted that deal as a major breakthrough with the Japanese. They said, "We are going to get American beef into Japan," and even my colleagues here jump up and down and yell and shout and think this is something. We would have thought that the trade negotiators had just won the Olympics, for God's sake.

Then you look at the fine print, and do you know what we found? On this wonderful agreement with the Japanese on beef, do you know what happens at the end of it? When it is phased in, when we have ratcheted down all the barriers and done all the things, we are left with only a 50-percent tariff. That is defined as success when we negotiate it with the Japanese. If in any other set of negotiations, the negotiations end with a 50-percent tariff on foreign goods coming into this country, it would be defined as a failure by everybody involved. But when we finish our negotiations with the Japanese and have ratcheted them down to only a 50-percent tariff on beef, you would have thought we had just provided a free steak fry for the world.

We take 305 million cars and pickups from Japan, and we say to them, "It is OK that we can't get more rice and bottles of ketchup and corned beef and enough regular beef into your country."

That is not right. We ought to be selling insurance and building airports and doing all the things that are necessary to have free and fair trade between us and Japan. And it is not just Japan. It is a lot more than Japan.

My point is that one of the elements in putting this country back on track is demanding and insisting on fair trade. Free trade is nonsense. It does not mean a thing. If it is not fair, "free" does not mean anything to me. It is time for this country to stand up for its own interests and to say that American workers and American producers count for something and we are willing for a change to begin supporting them and getting access to other markets around the world.

Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I just want to compliment the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] for the work that he has done in this particular area. I had an opportunity a month or so ago to travel with the gentleman down to his district and to visit with farmers in his region and see really how difficult and tough it is out there, to not just make a profit, but keep the farming community alive in a very, very tough time, tough environment economically.

But North Dakota is not that different from my State of Texas. We are the No. 1 or No. 2 leading rice producing State in the country. Yet, as hard as we would like to introduce our product into the Japanese market, they refuse to allow us to do so.

Our rice is four times cheaper than Japanese rice and far more nutritious. Yet the Japanese refuse to let us sell our products in Japan, and that is not right.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] has spoken out on these kinds of issues for some time, and we need to make some changes. Frankly, the administration has got to be more aggressive, much, much more aggressive to level this playing field.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] about something that he started out on at the outset of his remarks, and that was concerning the beginning of the Reagan era where the President promised then that you could have it all, you could cut spending in social areas, raise it in defense, and dramatically cut taxes to the wealthy, and still have a balanced budget and vibrant economy. I think the gentleman was correct to point out that was fallacious then.

Many people who watch special orders and listen to the Democrats rail against the Republicans, or the Republicans rail against the Democrats for their control of Congress all the time, may find that a very dissatisfying meal. It is really incumbent upon us to look to the future and suggest what path we would take.

The gentleman was in the process of doing that when we interrupted him. I hope he gets back to it.

But I want to comment on one thing. It seems to me the most important commodity that is missing from the political landscape today is the truth. It is not really so much a question of whether we are ethical or not ethical in the Congress of the United States. I happen to think that this is an ethical institution, governed by men and women, the vast majority of whom, whether they are conservatives or liberals, Democrats or Republicans, are interested in the public interest. They may make from time to time mistakes of one sort or another, but they are ethically based.

What I am concerned about is that the Congress and the Senate and certainly this President are afraid to tell the American people the truth about what the gentleman was dealing with, and that is that this country is in trouble, that the recognition of the problem is the first step to solving the problem, and that it is not a question of having a balanced budget amendment to force us to be responsible.

We have to make hard choices. We have to explain to the American people, and I know the Republicans hate to hear this, that these last 10 years we have made enormous economic mistakes in judgment, the consequences of which are that the middle class is dwindling, people are living month to month, week to week on paychecks, and are frightened by the future.

I am afraid I do not see that political dialog. I do not see people standing up and saying to the American people, look, there are problems here. Unless we pull together, Democrats and Republicans, they are not going to be solved.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman makes a point I was going to make later. I think it is essential.

There was a member of the minority on the floor earlier today who talked about these enormous deficits, drowning in a sea of debt caused by the Congress, and so on. We have heard that ad nauseam.

Look, I am the first to admit to this failure. All of us, it seems to me, are failing when this country is not on track doing the things it needs to do to invest in its future and to build its future. But it does no good and serves no useful purpose for us to try to figure out who is ultimately, finally, and totally responsible, and who ought to be blamed.

I have my own view of it. I have said for a decade that this fiscal policy was reckless and dangerous. But, look: People in this country want a future that is a good future. They do not care who gives it to them. They could care less whether it was Republicans who come up with the good ideas or Democrats.

Unfortunately, what we found is so often we fight so much that instead of getting at the best of what both parties have to offer, we get the worst of each.

I think it is important, and I think if the President would decide to focus here in this country and come home and say yes, foreign affairs worked, but I am going to focus on this country now, I think he would find a Congress willing to set aside a lot of differences, say we are no longer Republicans or Democrats, conservatives or liberals; we are people employed by the American people to confront the needs of this country and to meet its challenges.

One of the things that we have got to do is not only cement a relationship between Republicans and Democrats, the White House and Congress, the conservatives and liberals, but decide to meet the enormous challenge to put the country back on track. There must also be a welding of a will and determination between the Government and the private sector.

It is nuts for us to try to compete with other countries when those countries have their public sector and private sector welded together in one common purpose, to go out in the international marketplace and win. Our public sector and private sector are adversaries, fighting each other at every turn. It cannot work that way and must not work that way in the future if this country is going to be the kind of country it can be and should be.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] makes an excellent point about the fact that this country needs a new kind of economics, a new kind of capitalism.

We see capitalism working so tremendously well in nations such as Japan and Germany. Yet when we look at what has happened here in America, we find an entirely different story over the course of the last 20 years.

We find that around 20 or 25 years ago the United States of America controlled 75 percent of the world's consumer electronics market. As the gentleman has pointed out, today we do not make a single television set in America. We do not make so many products. Every product you can think of, whether it is washers, dryers, stoves, were all made in America and exported overseas. Yet somehow the American people have been blamed because of their so-called lack of productivity, because somehow the working people in this country do not have the skills nor the determination to be able to continue to make the goods that we have in the past.

But the fact is that we saw on our Japanese TV sets just a few months ago airplanes made here in America fly across the sky and drop a bomb at 700 miles an hour down the smokestack of the Iraqi International Guard headquarters.

The German workers, the Japanese workers, the capitalists in those countries were in awe of American technology.

The fact is that we have the technology. But what we do not have are the incentives that, as the gentleman has pointed out, could coordinate a strategy, as we have had in our military expenditures, to be able to make equipment, to be able to make products that enable this country to effectively compete.

We have gone from 75 percent of the world's consumer electronics market to less than 5 percent. Less than 5 percent.

Now, it seems to me that if we had the kind of coordinated economy that these other nations have, that we certainly have the skills on behalf of the American workers, we have the capital, and we have the technology. But what we do not have in this country today is the leadership at the top levels of this Government that is willing to stand up for the American worker, that is willing to defend our technology, that is willing to put together the package that is necessary in order for this country to be able to go out and compete in defined markets.

Whether that is in areas we are still lightyears ahead of the rest of the world in, whether they be in areas such as insurance and banking, whether they find the kinds of technology that we have in advance of other nations with regard to drugs, with regard to the whole medical field in general, the fact is that there is still an enormous amount of understanding and knowledge that the United States has above the rest of the world.

But if we do not bring the wagons 'round in order to protect ourselves from some of these infringements that are taking place, then I think we are going to suffer the kinds of downturns that we have had to withstand over the course of the last 20 years.

So I want to commend the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] for the efforts he has made and suggest that the kind of coordinated effort that enables this country to effectively compete with our counterparts abroad is entirely accurate and what we need to be able to compete into the future.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from North Dakota for yielding to me. I have been listening carefully to his entire presentation today, and I find a tremendous amount that I personally agree with.

What made it so interesting to me and why I choose to participate with him is right now on the Committee on the Budget, the gentleman from California, Chairman PANETTA has got all of us who are serving on the Committee on the Budget looking at a 10-year plan.

There were some in the media and some economists, I suppose, that are smarter than us and have said that is ridiculous. We cannot plan 10 years out, but they missed the point.

The point is that if we do not have a 10-year plan with a 1-year and a 2-year installment that moves us in the direction of that plan, we will never get to the goal of which we seek.

As the gentleman was discussing, the defense function of the budget and all of the valid points being made about sharing of burdens, which are going to have to be faced up to in much the way that we have described it, it seems to me that we need to plan for that. Because obviously the world has changed. As we begin to do something about last year's $268 billion deficit, next year's $362 billion deficit, a national debt that now stands at $3.6 trillion, of which one of the best things we can do, the quickest and the easiest to reduce the deficit is to reduce the interest rate which is occurring, and now lo and behold people are complaining that interest rates are getting too cheap. But I point out for every 1 percent decline in interest on our national debt, we reduce the deficit by $36 billion.

Mention was made a while ago by our colleague from New York who mentioned the balanced budget amendment, not in a positive way. I know the gentleman in the well is supportive of that, as I am supportive of that, as 256 of our colleagues are supportive of that. We acknowledge and agree with the gentleman that a balanced budget amendment will not balance the budget and will not solve the problem. The way we do that is we deal with the defense function. We deal with trade matters. We work toward a level playing field so that our producers, whether they be agriculture or whether they be anyone else, can compete and compete profitably.

We set that as a goal.

Why I so strongly support the balanced budget amendment, as I believe the gentleman in the well does, is that it gives us a goal that says to us, next year, start dealing realistically with that budget.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Let me just make this point: The deficit that you are citing is accurate except that that is a number that is reduced by the misuse of Social Security funds. This year we are going to collect over $70 billion in Social Security funds above Social Security needs this year, and we are doing that for a specific reason. We need the money after the turn of the century when the baby boomers retire.

In order to get to the deficit number you used, which is what OMB uses and the Committee on the Budget uses, you subtract that. In fact, we should not subtract that.

In fact, the operating budget deficit is about $420 billion this year, and I did not come to Congress thinking we should change the Constitution. I am pretty stingy about supporting constitutional change.

I decided, after seeing absolutely no willingness on the part of the White House and no ability on the part of Congress to respond, as they should and must to these deficits, that if there is no other way we must amend the Constitution.

I do not happen to think that will solve the problems, unfortunately, but at least it applies more and more pressure to respond to these crippling deficits.

Mr. STENHOLM. I totally agree. That is why I get a little nervous now when many of our colleagues believe that we can tap into that trust fund and increase the national debt, every time we spend money, and when I say tap into the trust fund, I quickly say we do not spend Social Security money of the trust fund. We just increase the debt is what we do, in order to give a tax cut.

That worries me a little bit. But that is not the subject, what you are talking about, and what I want to do is get back to what you are talking about today, which is a plan.

There are differences of opinion on different parts of it. Certainly we will have to debate those, but it is a plan.

I believe when we see what will be coming out of the Committee on the Budget, as far as the 10-year plan of the gentleman from California, Chairman PANETTA, and I believe to be a bipartisan agreement on that committee, that you are going to see options being made.

The gentleman from New York made a remark a little while ago that he gets tired of being blamed as Congress for this national debt. This is one area that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] and I agree. I get tired of my colleagues coming on this floor and blaming the big-spending liberal Congress for the fact that we have increased our national debt in the last 10 years by $2.7 trillion, when we in the Congress, through the appropriating process, which is the only way we can spend money, have spent within $200 billion of what Presidents Reagan and Bush have asked us in their budget to spend.

That is a fact. I agree with the gentleman from New York, we ought to talk the truth, and to the best of my knowledge and ability we always try to do that.

I ask a simple question over and over in my town hall meetings when I am confronted with this: How can it be that it is the big spending liberal democratically controlled Congress that has caused this $2.7 trillion in debt when we have spent within $200 billion of what the Presidents have asked us to spend? Could it not be a shared responsibility of which the gentleman in the well said he accepts his share? I accept my 1/435 share of the blame. But clearly in matters of trade, in matters of defense of this free world, and in matters of the budget direction of this country, it is time we start biting some little bullets, if we are going to do something about it.

The gentleman mentioned it. I agree with him. It is part of the plan.

The gentleman in the chair has got a plan in which he says what we ought to do is sit down and divide up the 1 trillion, 3,100 billion that we have to spend and just have a budget and show what it would take, what it would take for us to balance next year's budget. I think those are the kind of economics 101 lessons that we are going to have to start sharing apparently with ourselves if we are going to get serious about doing it.

I conclude by saying that I commend you for this special order, for the focus that you are giving today in the area of defense and trade. We have also got to start doing a few things like not forward-funding so many of our appropriation bills and getting ourselves deeper and deeper in the hole as far as the spending and the budget is concerned.

We have got to stop doing that somehow, some way if we are going to solve this problem.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I would like to just mention a couple of other areas that I think we need to be involved in. One of the things that when we finally put things back on course, if you succeed in the international marketplace, it is because you have produced things that people want to buy.

I assume that consumers out there who are looking for a toaster, a tire, automobile, motorcycle, they are rational consumers who are going to look at all the products available and make a decision that in their judgment this is the best product they can buy at the best price. They are not making decisions about was this made in Pittsburgh or Korea. They are making judgments about what is the best value for me as a consumer.

We are going to win in the international marketplace in the years ahead when somewhere halfway around the world someone buys a product or at least looks at a product and sees on the back side of it a label that says, "Made in the USA." And immediately they say, "I know what that means. That means that is the best product I can buy. That means quality and value."

When people around the world see Made in the USA labels, and think that thought, then we begin to succeed again.

It was interesting that we have a little award called the Malcolm Baldrige Quality Award. It is not a giant program. It is relatively small, but it is interesting to see how some of our producers are now starting to compete for designation of that award.

I tell you that is moving in the right direction. I think we need a public sector/private sector joint initiative for product quality in America again. We need to emphasize product quality in this country.

When we do that, then we begin to win in the international marketplace again. We need a commitment to improve our education system. People talk about the crisis in education. I am not an educator. I have been educated in several schools, several colleges, but I am not an educator, and I do not pretend to know how to fix it.

I do know that it takes some resources, and it may take alternative approaches to put our education system back on track. Our kids are in school 180 days a year. The Japanese kids are in school about 240-250 days a year.

It seems to me, we must decide that education is the foundation of virtually all progress in this country and the investment in education is a direct and important investment in this country's future.

We have a health care crisis in this country, and I am telling you that everybody in this body is wondering how do we respond to the health care crisis. We understand we have to, but it is not an easy thing to deal with. Yet we cannot be a country as good as this country is with 35 to 40 million who have no health coverage. People showing up at hospitals and being turned away who are sick. Families unable to take their children to the doctor because they do not have money. Health care ought not to be a function of how much money you have in your wallet. Health care for people who are sick ought to be a right.

How do you develop a universal system using the best in our private sector and maybe some public sector initiative to put the system back in place that works for all Americans?

We have to do that. Again, that will not be easy. That may even cost some money, but we have to do that, one way or another.

This country of ours is a country that over a couple of centuries has always responded to good leadership. We go back and forth. We shift right for a while and then we shift left for a while and then we come back to the center, and if you look at this country's history you will always find that no matter where it moves it somehow comes back to the center, because people in this country have an enormous amount of initiative, a great deal of self-pride, and they want what is best for this country.

We have gone through the 1980's which was in my judgment a very selfish period in America. The message has been that we have to pull ourselves up by our bootstraps, and worry only about us, we are No. 1 and we do not care about the others. If you have worked your whole life and not filled your bank account for your retirement, tough luck.

That is all right. I think success is the big motivator, but we define success differently. I had a friend who said, "My parents were ministers. My father was a minister and my mother taught Sunday school. They worked 50 years. At the end of that time they ended up with very little because he was a minister in rural churches that did not pay much. My mother taught Sunday school and taught piano as well to make ends meet. At the end of 50 years they ended up without much because they were not able to put much away. On the other end of the block was a fellow who had a business on Main Street and did very well because his motive was to make as much money as he could. He was good for the community as well, and he made a lot of money, and God bless him, he reached retirement period and he was going to have a good life in his retirement."

The question this fellow asked was "Did my parents contribute less to their community? Did they contribute less to this country, ministering in a small church and giving piano lessons, than the fellow at the end of the block who committed his life to making as much money as he could?" The answer is no.

We have a country that has an obligation to promote incentives for people to do well; yes, to encourage people to do well and to make money, to prosper, to succeed. But we have a country also that has responsibility to teach all of us, and especially to teach the children, that in a democracy like ours, in a country as good as ours we have a responsibility for each other, because there are times when others do not do as well. That is when we reach out a helping hand, and part of the agenda in this Congress is a helping hand. We have got people sometimes who run on tough times, who are down on their luck, who have trouble, and that is when we reach out a helping hand. Some people call that liberal do-good welfare stuff.

It is interesting to me. I have been here 11 years and there is not a nickel's worth of difference between how much people want to spend. Republicans generally sit on that side of the Chamber and Democrats on this side of the Chamber, and there is not a nickel's worth of difference about how much they want to spend. There is a radical difference in what they want to spend if for. They have not ever met a weapon system they did not like and they did not want three of, and on our side of the aisle there is not a social program that we do not want to create a new vending machine program for and spend for. So there is a difference in what our priorities are.

But I am telling you, we should have an agenda in this country not to leave people behind while we try and move the country ahead. Most importantly, while we try and move this country ahead in the coming months and years, we have got to decide that there are some fundamental things that need doing if this country is going to survive as a world economic power. I have mentioned just a couple of them. I intended to go through a list today, and I will do that at some later time, but they are not very difficult. Pay your bills. You learn that in small towns. They teach that when you are old enough to count, pay your bills. You have to do that. Fair play. Insist that we be treated fairly. Fair play, that is something you learn in kindergarten. We should expect other people to pay their fair share on burden sharing. Invest in your kids' educations. That is not such a tough thing to understand. My folks understood it. This country needs to invest in its children. That means building the finest education system in the world, because that is the foundation of this country's economic future.

A farm program that works. The genesis of progress in this country, I think, begins on the farm, and we can have a farm program that works easily if we just decide that our interest in a farm program is to maintain a network of family farmers, and that we want to target farm program benefits to help family sized farms.

Health care. I can go through the list. There is a whole list of things that represent the agenda for this country's future. The agenda, it seems to me, is an agenda especially for Democrats and Republicans, for the White House and the Congress to decide to work together to put America back on track and help America grow again.

SUPPORT THE DAIRY PRODUCT STABILIZATION ACT OF 1991

(Mr. STENHOLM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, next week the Committee on Agriculture will bring to the floor of the House the Dairy Product Stabilization Act of 1991 as an amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 2837, dairy legislation reported out of the committee in July.

This is vital legislation, needed by both dairy farmers and consumers. During the last 3 years, the Nation's milk markets have experienced unprecedented instability, and during most of this year milk prices received by dairy farmers were below their average cost of production. These prices must improve to avoid wholesale financial hardship among milk producers and forced exit from this important industry.

This market instability leads to higher than average retail prices for dairy products, to the detriment of the Nation's consumers. The intent of the legislation is to stabilize prices so that both dairy producers and American consumers benefit.

We have attempted in this bill to craft a dairy program that deals with the long-term needs of the industry and meets the short-term needs of dairy producers. In addition, we have attempted to craft legislation that addresses the concerns of the administration, the cattle industry, and the consumer. This substitute drops from the committee reported bill the authority for a two-tier dairy program and would establish instead a voluntary diversion program. This change was prompted by the administration's strong opposition to the two-tier approach. The substitute contains sections designed to hold harmless from the potential impact of the bill, the cattle industry, and the WIC Program. In fact, dairy producers have gone out of their way in this bill to alleviate any possible adverse impact on WIC participants and on cattle producers.

We will bring the result of months of effort to the floor next week. Long, tedious, and well-meaning negotiations have resulted in this compromise legislation that will benefit dairy producers and the American consumer by stabilizing milk prices. I urge your support of this very important legislation.

THE PRESIDENT SHOULD COME HOME AND FACE AMERICA'S PROBLEMS

(Mr. KENNEDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, if this is Friday, then the President must be in Rome. And sure enough, he is, telling the world that there's no recession at home. Earlier this week, he told Americans that the problem is all in their heads. He said it's a great time to buy a house, to buy a car.

Now, we all know that, in economics as in the rest of life, attitude counts for a lot. Optimism is important. But blind optimism is another thing. The President is preaching tinkerbell economics: Just blink your eyes, click your heels, and the recession is over.

He needs to stop blinking, and to start opening his eyes to the truth. The problem is not in people's heads. It's in their pockets, which have been picked bare by a decade of Republican rule. Tax cuts for the rich, billion dollar bailouts for high-flying S&L's, record budget deficits, defense giveaways to the Europeans and Asians, and the unopposed loss of millions of American jobs to Third World countries—these are the reasons for the recession. These are the reasons why working men and women fear that they may be the first generation of Americans to live poorer than the last. And these are the problems that must be faced if America's proud and prosperous heritage is to be preserved.

What we need from the White House is reality, not wishful thinking. We need solutions, not cheerleading. Come home, Mr. President, and let's start taking care of our own.

HUMANITARIAN AID TO THE SOVIET UNION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not often come to the floor of the House and occupy this much time, but the issue is very important.

I have just now read the following oped by Joe Murray, a senior writer for Cox Newspapers.

I think it makes sense to say that the Soviets need our advice and assistance, which is plentiful, and not our money, which is in very short supply.

The current proposal to give Russia money is faulted for the following reasons among others: Americans do not want this proposal in the face of economic hurting here at home. A billion dollars will not save the Russians. The amount needed to bail out the Russians would dwarf the Marshall plan, far exceeding any amount of money that has been suggested in this legislation.

Russia abounds in natural resources such as oil and strategic materials which our country needs. The Russians should learn about free enterprise firsthand. They should sell us their resources which we greatly need and get hard currency which they greatly need.

Other countries, such as France, Turkey, and China have entered into agreements with the Soviet Union to swap essential consumer goods to Russia in exchange for oil and other petroleum products and strategic and critical materials and industrial goods.

It is illogical to give away this money to a country that is so rich in natural resources. Russia abounds in natural resources such as oil and strategic materials. Rather than giving the Russians money, we should enter into a mutually beneficial agreement, one where they sell us products that our country needs, and we pay them.

As chairman of the Committee on Strategic Materials, I know the strategic materials that the U.S. Government wants to buy which we do not have in adequate amounts and which the Russians have in excess, and they include beryllium, chromite, manganese, nickel, platinum-group metals, titanium, and vanadium.

I support helping the Russians demilitarize and support helping them establish a market economy. However, throwing scarce U.S. taxpayer dollars at the problem is not the answer. A better solution is to share the experience and talent of American businessmen and businesswomen. As the proverb says, "If you give a man a fish, he eats one meal. If you teach him now to fish, he eats for a lifetime." I suggest we teach the Russians how to fish.

Mr. Speaker, it would be a mistake not to help the Russians advance democracy and free enterprise economy. U.S. taxpayers' dollars are not needed as far as I can see.

Section 12 of the reduction of Soviet military threat portion of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, fiscal year 1992, part A, provides up to $1 billion of nonreimbursable assistance to the Soviet Union. Congress should not support a giveaway program to the Soviet Union at a time when the United States economy is in recession, the United States budget deficit is estimated to exceed $260 billion for 1990-91, and there are so many unmet needs here at home, and we have, as you know, almost a $4 trillion national debt which we have achieved mostly during the last 10 years.

Any United States aid package to the Soviet Union should incorporate the principle that the United States should, if possible, receive an equivalent value of materials or services in return for the aid provided.

In 1990, the Soviet Union exported $109 billion worth of commodities including petroleum, petroleum products, natural gas, metals, wood, agricultural products, and a wide variety of manufactured goods.

The United States should follow the lead of France, Turkey, and China, which have entered into agreements with the Soviet Union which provide or allow the Soviet Union to purchase meat, sugar, powdered milk, grain, tea, peanuts, tobacco, cigarettes, textiles, medicines, leather, and industrial detergents and many others. In return, the Soviets would furnish or repay the loans with oil and other petroleum products, strategic and critical materials, and industrial goods. The French deal amounted to $405 million. The two Turkish loans totaled $500 million. The Chinese favorable-goods loans totaled 1 billion Swiss francs, $700 million.

From the 1960's to the early 1970's the U.S. Government conducted its own barter exchange program with a number of foreign countries which disposed of large quantities of surplus U.S. agricultural commodities for a total of $1.6 billion, of strategic and critical materials, which would be placed on the national defense stockpile.

Barter and exchange can provide a variety of opportunities for the U.S. Government to receive Soviet goods in exchange for United States humanitarian aid or to barter these goods with other nations or corporations for cash or other more suitable materials.

Mr. Murray's article reads as follows under the headline of "Soviets Need Our Advice, Not Money."

Mr. Speaker, this is a very vital issue before our country today. It would be a shame to throw away a billion dollars in a way in which the defense authorizing bill suggests.

It would also be a great shame if our country did not cooperate with Russia and bring about free enterprise and democracy in that great piece of the world's surface.

SOVIETS NEED OUR ADVICE, NOT MONEY

(By Joe Murray)

SVERDLOVSK, SIBERIA.—Stas Bursh sends this message to America:

Don't send money.

"It would be a very good way to waste money," he said.

Stas Bursh is 27. He is thin, blond and boyish in appearance. He is a Ph.D. who teaches physics at Sverdlovsk Institute.

We met at the memorial at the site where Czar Nicholas II and his family were executed by the Bolsheviks in 1918. It's nothing more than a vacant lot where a 12-foot-tall cross has been erected. The cross, three tiers in the tradition of the Russian Orthodox Church, is nothing more than crudely welded iron bars that have been painted white. Plastic flowers had been left at the foot of the cross.

Stas Bursh comes here to be alone with his thoughts. He avoids the site when there is a formal memorial service. There are too many people then for it to be meaningful to him. He likes to stop here to think for a while.

What does he think about?

"I think of the shame," he said, gesturing toward the cross. "Not because of what happened here in 1918 but because of what is happening here now. This cross is the only thing the Russian people did to mark this place. It makes me ashamed."

"It's the same with economics and politics," he said. "Our leaders keep talking, and nothing is done. You can see it here. They only speak, speak, speak, and do nothing."

Mr. Bursh is married, and he and his wife have a 3-year-old daughter. His wife is a gynecologist. They live in a tiny apartment with her parents. It is all they can afford.

What can America do to help?

"I don't think it would be food parcels. What is really important is medicine. The medical situation is awful. We have little or no drugs, no medicine, no medical equipment. Every time my wife comes across a medical problem, she has a dilemma. There is such a gap between the right way to treat the patient and what she has at her hand, the way she can do it.

"We as a people would like to do many things for ourselves. We don't know how. If the United States could help us with management, education and technical advice, that would be of great assistance. But don't give us money. It would be a very good way to waste money."

Then Mr. Bursh had a question for me: How long did I think it would take Russia to recover? I paused before answering. I didn't want to discourage him, but I told him what I thought:

That it would take at least a generation—a new generation of Russians who would grow up knowing and believing that they could better themselves, that if they got a good education and worked hard, their life would be better than their parents'.

Mr. Bursh shook his head sadly. "I think it will be at least three generations," he said. "We have had 70 years of communism. I think it will take almost that long to recover from communism. I doubt I will live to see it."

☐ YES ☐ NO

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER__________________________________

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.
☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."◆

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

Is this an Amendment?

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER ______ ☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."♦

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER

—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."◆

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

IN SUPPORT OF THE SCHUMER CORE BANKING AMENDMENT

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the amendment of the gentleman from New York, Mr. SCHUMER. I think it makes a contribution to the bill before us today.

The Schumer core banking proposal could help avoid another savings and loan-type fiasco, only this time for the commercial banks. Recall, the S&L's got into trouble when rates they could pay depositors were deregulated. S&L's then bid against one another for deposits by raising interest rates. To pay these higher interest rates they were forced to invest the deposits in risky endeavors carrying higher rates of return. When these risky ventures went sour, the house of cards fell quickly.

Mr. Schumer's core bank proposal would construct a two-tier commercial banking system. One tier—the insured tier—would guarantee the deposits and offer more modest rates of return on these deposits. The other tier—the uninsured tier—would allow greater risk and greater return.

One category of banks would be limited in the interest rates they could offer depositors on their FDIC-insured accounts. These banks could charge borrowers lower interest rates because they would not be under pressure to produce high rates of return on their portfolios in order to service their depositors.

The second category of banks would not be able to offer FDIC insurance to depositors and would be required to give clear notice of this to their depositors. These noninsured banks could offer higher rates of return on deposits and could engage in riskier investments and loans in order to secure these high rates of return.

Another important feature of the core banking proposal is that it limits the total amount which could be lent to a single borrower. This proposal helps insure that no bank would become insolvent because it had overlent to one failed or failing borrower.

Mr. Chairman, it should also be noted that the Schumer core banking proposal would not restrict current deposit insurance coverage of $100,000 for any and all accounts at one or a series of banks, and it would be phased in over an 8-year period to cushion the transition and to accommodate smoothly the inevitable changes which would occur as depositors and banks repositioned themselves in the new banking system.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I feel the core bank proposal—while novel and untried in the broad, national sense—should be authorized. I feel it could help stabilize commercial banking in the challenging years ahead.

MARIA EUGENIA ESCOBAR, A PIONEER IN TRAVEL BETWEEN COLOMBIA AND THE UNITED STATES

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Maria Eugenia Escobar, who was recently featured in the Miami Herald. The article "Tour Operator Finds Her Niche" by Charles B. Rabin tells how Ms. Escobar, and her mother Ligia Ospina, have operated Calitours, a travel agency which has pioneered travel between Cali, Colombia, and Miami:

[From the Miami Herald]

TOUR OPERATOR FINDS HER NICHE

Citing a lack of mall traffic and the need to expand, Maria Eugenia Escobar has packed up her belongings and moved on.

Calitours, a full-service travel agency and tour operator, has abandoned its offices in the Omni International Mall and relocated in the Miami Center in downtown Miami.

"We were worried about the clients' comfort," said Escobar. "Now, we've implemented new services and added a translator and a notary public." In addition to Escobar, Calitours employes three agents and an office manager.

The company was formed 20 years ago in Cali, Colombia, by Escobar's mother, Ligia Ospina, and her mother's sister.

"She was the first woman owner of a travel agency in Cali," Escobar said proudly.

In 1977, Ospina opened her first office in Miami.

"Mom traveled here a lot and used to bring tourists here. She saw an opportunity to have a correspondence between Miami and Cali," Escobar said.

"Mom is no longer involved in the day-to-day business," said Escobar.

Escobar, 29, moved to the United States in 1981 to study English at Western Michigan University. She spent two years there, then moved on to Kalamazoo Community College, also in Michigan, where she studied business administration.

After finishing at Kalamazoo in 1984, Escobar was ready to venture into the business world.

"I thought I'd start my own business," she said. "I did not want to work in travel."

Things didn't go quite as planned.

In the fall of 1984, Ospina told her daughter that she intended to sell the agency because she didn't have the time to take care of it.

"It was very sad to see something she worked hard at for seven years go down the drain. So I took over, and mom moved back to Cali," Escobar said.

Today, although Escobar admits business was better in the early '80s, she said the economy doesn't seem to be affecting her business.

"I don't see the recession out there; I don't feel it," she said. "People have to travel anyway."

Michele Shelburne, president of Ladatco Tours in Coral Gables, agrees with Escobar's assessment.

"Overall, our business has been affected, but in South American travel less than most destinations," she said. "The people who travel there are of a higher echelon."

Escobar refers to her agency as a "pioneer in Latin American travel." She said much of the company's income is made by coordinating travel between Miami and Cali for special events. The Ballet de Cali Yimboro's performances in Cali and Calle Ocho in Miami are two such events, she said.

As for the competition, she says: "There's room for everyone. If you do your job well and have personalized service, you'll get your fair share."

I am happy to pay tribute to Ms. Escobar, her mother and the other employees at Calitours by reprinting this article from the Miami Herald. Through recessions and good economic times, they have worked to improve travel between Colombia and the United States, and have helped bring our two nations closer together.

LET IROQUOIS START DELIVERING MUCH-NEEDED NATURAL GAS TO NORTHEAST

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, the Iroquois Natural Gas Pipeline was scheduled to come on line next year, bringing much-needed natural gas from Canada to New York and New England. Now it seems as though a small group of Iroquois' potential competitors are making a last ditch effort to stop the pipeline from opening. They have asked the U.S. Court of Appeals to revoke Iroquois' regulatory approval.

Mr. Speaker, I have just one thing to say to these people who are trying to prevent Iroquois from beginning operations: Stop this nonsense. Let Iroquois open.

We all know that natural gas offers an excellent opportunity to reduce our dependence on oil. It is clean, efficient, and found in very large quantities in North America. We all also know that there is not enough pipeline capacity to bring sufficient quantities of natural gas to the Northeast.

Iroquois would go a long way toward solving this problem. When fully on line, Iroquois will bring nearly half a billion cubic feet of natural gas to the Northeast every day, and we can really use it.

Canadian gas represents a great new opportunity for the Northeast and the rest of the country to acquire new sources of natural gas, and under the free-trade agreement, it is as American as domestic gas.

Opponents have tried to derail Iroquois ever since it was proposed. It took 5 years and millions of dollars just to get regulatory approval, but finally the pipeline is almost completed and ready to start delivering gas.

This latest petition to the court of appeals raises issues that have already been dealt with and is just a desperate attempt by the petitioners to avoid competition.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the court turns down this petition, and I hope we have seen the last of the attempts to stop Iroquois. It is time for Iroquois to start bringing clean, efficient, natural gas to the Northeast.

DAIRY LEGISLATION (H.R. 2837)

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to advise the Members of the House regarding anticipated floor action on H.R. 2837.

The bill may be considered on the floor of the House during the week of November 11.

It is my intention, on behalf of members of the Committee on Agriculture, to ask that an amendment in the nature of a substitute be made in order as original text during the bill's consideration. As Members of the House have not had an opportunity to see this amendment, I am having it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The Rules Committee has announced that it intends to meet during the week of November 11 to consider granting a rule to provide for the consideration of H.R. 2837, and that it may be inclined to grant a modified rule. Consequently, the Rules Committee has also announced that any Member who wishes to offer an amendment to the substitute amendment must submit 55 copies of his or her amendment, together with a brief explanation, to the Rules Committee not later than 5 p.m. on Tuesday, November 12, 1991.

Copies of the substitute amendment will be made available in the office of the Committee on Agriculture in room 1301 of the Longworth House Office Building.

Mr. Speaker, as many of my colleagues are aware, the Committee on Agriculture reported H.R. 2837 in July of this year with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. Since the administration threatened to veto that legislation, many of the members of our committee have involved themselves in a sincere effort to develop a compromise that would meet the concerns expressed by the administration. The substitute printed in today's RECORD represents the product of our efforts.

The substitute amendment would establish the minimum support price at $11.10 per hundredweight and would require the Secretary of Agriculture to implement a voluntary milk diversion program when surplus production is expected to exceed certain levels.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for their cooperation in this procedure.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute for H.R. 2837—that may be made in order as original text for the purpose of amendment during the bill's consideration—follows:

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE TO H.R. 2837, AS REPORTED—OFFERED BY MR. DE LA GARZA

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE AND TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Dairy Production Stabilization Act of 1991".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for 5 this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title and table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings.
Sec. 3. Policy and purpose.
Sec. 4. Price support rate and program operations.
Sec. 5. Manufacturing allowance.
Sec. 6. Surplus reduction program.
Sec. 7. Advisory board of milk producers, processors, and marketers.
Sec. 8. Disposal of excess purchases of milk and milk products.
Sec. 9. Livestock sector enhancement.
Sec. 10. Amendment to milk marketing orders.
Sec. 11. Dairy cattle export program.
Sec. 12. Protection for women, infants, and children participating in WIC.
Sec. 13. Modification of dairy termination program.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Milk and milk products are basic foods and a valuable part of the human diet as a primary source of required nutrients, such as calcium.

(2) The production of milk and milk products plays a significant role in the economy of the United States, in that—

(A) milk and milk products are consumed by millions of people in the United States every day; and

(B) the production of milk and milk products involves tens of thousands of milk producers and employs hundreds of thousands of persons in the handling, processing, and marketing of milk and milk products.

(3) Milk producers have a relatively limited ability to protect themselves from price risk because milk is a highly perishable commodity.

(4) In the absence of an effective price support program for milk, producer prices for milk in future years may become too unstable to maintain an economically healthy dairy sector.

(5) Milk and milk products move in interstate and foreign commerce, and milk and milk products that do not move in interstate or foreign commerce directly burden or affect interstate commerce.

(6) The problems currently facing milk producers disrupt the orderly exchange of milk and milk products in interstate commerce and, because they affect the national public interest, burden and obstruct the normal channels of interstate commerce.

(7) The measures initiated by the amendments made by this Act, including the surplus reduction program, are needed to—

(A) ensure consumers of a reliable and adequate supply of pure and wholesome milk and milk products at reasonable prices;

(B) respond adequately to current and anticipated future supply and demand imbalances regarding milk and milk products; and

(C) ensure a level of farm income for milk producers adequate to maintain productive capacity sufficient to meet anticipated consumer needs.

(8) The establishment of an advisory board of milk producers, processors, and marketers is vital to the success of the price support and surplus reduction programs in that the board will provide milk producers, processors, and marketers a role in determining how the problems affecting the dairy industry will be addressed.

(9) A viable national strategy for improving profitability for mile producers should include a program to assist producers to reduce their production costs through the adoption of improved and sustainable dairy production practices, such as rotational grazing of grass-and-legume forages and seasonal dairying.

SEC. 3. POLICY AND PURPOSE.

(A) IN GENERAL.—It is declared to be the policy of Congress that it is in the public interests to authorize, through the amendments made by this Act, the establishment of programs to—

(1) achieve a proper balance between milk production and consumption, so as to improve and stabilize farm income;

(2) reduce the likelihood of unreasonable fluctuations in supplies and prices of milk and stablizie the price of milk at fair and reasonable levels, so as to protect the interests of consumers and producers; and

(3) facilitate orderly marketing conditions for milk and milk products, so as to enable milk producers in the United States to respond adequately to the needs of consumers.

(b) PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS.—The programs authorized by the amendments made by this Act shall not be used to reduce the production of pure and wholesome milk and milk products below the level required to meet the needs of consumers in the United States. In carrying out these amendments, the Secretary of Agriculture, in consultation with the National Dairy Producers, Processors, and Marketers Advisory Board, shall give due regard to the maintenance of a continuous and stable supply of milk and milk products adequate to meet consumer demand.

SEC. 4. PRICE SUPPORT RATE AND PROGRAM OPERATIONS.

(a) EXTENSION OF PROGRAM.—Subsection (k) of section 204 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446e) is amended by striking "December 31, 1995" and inserting "December 31, 1998".

(b) PRICE SUPPORT RATE.—Subsection (b) of such section is amended to read as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, in no event shall the price of milk be supported for a calendar year at less than the rate specified in this subsection for that year.".

(c) DEFINITIONS.—Subsection (a) of such section is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "IN GENERAL.—"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

The weighting factors shall total 100 percent.

'(B) Net Removals.—The term 'net removals' means the level of purchases of milk and the products of milk by the Commodity Credit Corporation under subsection (c)(1), less sales under section 407 for unrestricted use.

"(C) Excess inventory.—The term 'excess inventory' means that portion of the net removals by the Commodity Credit Corporation for a calendar year in excess of 4,500,000,000 pounds (milk equivalent, total milk solids basis).

"(D) 48 contiguous states.—The term '48 contiguous States' means the 48 contiguous States in the continental United States.

(2) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by striking "(A) In General.—" and conforming the margins of the paragraph to the paragraph heading; and

(B) by striking "1995," and all that follows through "the preceding calendar year," and inserting "1998, if the net removals by the Commodity Credit Corporation for that calendar year (as estimated under subsection (f) and adjusted to reflect the operation of any surplus reduction program)";

(3) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by striking "(A) In General.—" and conforming the margins of the paragraph to the paragraph heading; and

(B) by striking "1995," and all that follows through "the preceding calendar year," and inserting "1998, if the net removals by the Commodity Credit Corporation for that calendar year (as estimated under subsection (f) and adjusted to reflect the operation of any surplus reduction program)";

(4) in paragraph (3), by striking "calendar years 1992 through 1995," and inserting "calendar years 1992 through 1998,";

(5) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) Notification of rate adjustment.—Not later than November 20 of each calendar year, the Secretary shall notify the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate of any adjustment required under this subsection in the rate of price support for the following calendar year.";

(6) in paragraph (5), by striking "(5) Administration.—" and all that follows through "In estimating" in subparagraph (B) and inserting "(5) Administration.—In estimating"; and

"(B) Notification of results.—If the average of the prices monitored under this paragraph in a State for any three-month period is less than the support price in effect for that period under this section, the Secretary shall immediately notify the Congress of such fact in writing. In addition, not later than November 20 of each calendar year, the Secretary shall notify the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate of the results of such monitoring during the previous fiscal year and provide such recommendations with regard to those results as the Secretary considers appropriate.".

(e) Annual Estimate of Net Removals.—Subsection (f) of such section is amended to read as follows:

When making the estimate for a calendar year, the Secretary shall use the rate of price support to be in effect for that calendar year and shall consider surplus reduction contracts already entered into under section 204A that will be in effect during that calendar year.".

(f) Effect of Refund of Price Reduction Required by Budget Reconciliation.—Subsection (h)(3) of such section is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "A refund under this paragraph shall not be considered as any type of price support or payment for purposes of sections 1211 and 1221 of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3811 and 3821).".

(2) Effective date.—the amendments made by this subsection shall take effect as of January 1, 1991.

SEC. 5. MANUFACTURING ALLOWANCE.

Section 204(c) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446e) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) Manufacturing allowance.—

"(A) Minimum allowance established.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for purposes of supporting the price of milk through purchases of the products of milk under this section, the Secretary shall establish—

"(i) the manufacturing allowance of milk manufactured into butter and nonfat dry milk at not less than $1.37 per hundredweight of milk; and

"(ii) the manufacturing allowance for milk manufactured into cheese at not less than $1.52 per hundredweight of milk.

"(B) Manufacturing allowance defined.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'manufacturing allowance' means an amount (determined for purposes of the price support program for milk) applied separately to milk manufactured into butter and nonfat dry milk and to milk manufactured into cheese that, when added to the support price for milk, will enable a manufacturing plant of average efficiency in manufacturing these products to pay producers, on average, a price not less than the rate of price support for milk in effect during a 12-month period under this section when selling these products to the Commodity Credit Corporation.

"(C) Costs and returns reflected in allowance.—A manufacturing allowance shall reflect both the costs of manufacturing and selling products to the Corporation and the returns the plant receives from byproducts (other than whey solids as provided for in section 106 of the Food, Agriculture, Conservation, and Trade Act of 1990 (7 U.S.C. 1446e note)) not purchased by the Corporation.

"(D) Factors establishing the value of milk products per hundredweight.—For purposes of supporting the price of milk through purchases of the products of milk, the Secretary may not take into consideration any factors establishing the value per hundredweight of milk of—

"(i) butter in excess of 4.48 pounds;

"(ii) nonfat dry milk in excess of 8.13 pounds;

"(iii) cheese in excess of 10.1 pounds;

"(iv) whey fat in excess of .25 pound; and

"(v) buttermilk solids in any amount.

"(E) Benefit of increase for producers.—To the extent practicable, additional receipts that a manufacturing plant receives as a result of an increase in the manufacturing allowance under subparagraph (A) shall be passed through to producers supplying milk to the plant.".

SEC. 6. SURPLUS REDUCTION PROGRAM.

"(a) Establishment of Program.—The Agricultural Act of 1949 is amended by inserting after section 204 (7 U.S.C. 1446e) the following new section:

"SEC. 204A. SURPLUS REDUCTION PROGRAM.

"(a) Contracts with Producers to Reduce Milk Marketing.—The Secretary shall enter into surplus production contracts with producers in the 48 contiguous States to reduce the quantity of milk marketed for commercial use in order to ensure that net removals of milk by the Commodity Credit Corporation equal—

"(1) in calendar year 1992, not more than 4,500,000,000 pounds (milk equivalent, total milk solids basis), adjusted upward as required under subsection (b)(2); and

"(2) in each calendar years 1993 through 1998, not more than 4,500,000,000 pounds (milk equivalent, total milk solids basis).

"(b) Required Amount of the National Reduction in Milk Marketing.—

"(1) Determination.—The amount of the national reduction in the quantity of milk marketed during a calendar year to be achieved through surplus reduction contracts under subsection (a) shall be equal to the difference between—

"(A) the estimate of net removals prepared under section 204(f) for that year; and

"(B) a level of net removals of milk by the Commodity Credit Corporation during that year of not more than 4,500,000,000 pounds (milk equivalent, total milk solids basis).

"(2) Special rule for 1992.—For calendar year 1992, the amount of the national reduction in milk marketing determined under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by 50 percent or such other amount as the Secretary determines to be necessary to comply with the requirement specified in subsection (d)(4) to vary the implementation dates of surplus reduction contracts.

"(3) QUARTERLY EVALUATION OF REDUCTION AMOUNT.—The Secretary shall—

"(A) evaluate on a quarterly basis the amount of the national reduction in milk marketing determined under paragraph (1) for a calendar year; and

"(B) make such adjustments in that amount as the Secretary considers to be necessary based on the operation of the surplus reduction program and such other factors affecting the quantity of milk marketed for commercial use.

"(4) SEASONAL STABILITY.—To the maximum extent practicable and consistent with the objectives of the price support program under section 204, the Secretary shall administer the surplus reduction program in a manner that will reduce the seasonal fluctuation in the supply of milk produced in the United States.

"(c) REGIONAL BASIS FOR REDUCTIONS IN MILK MARKETING.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In entering into surplus reduction contracts under subsection (a) with producers, the Secretary shall ensure that participation is proportionately distributed, based on the quantity of milk produced, among the seven geographic regions identified in paragraph (2).

"(2) DEFINITION OF REGIONS.—For purposes of this section, the United States shall be divided into seven geographic regions as follows:

"(A) California, Oregon, and Washington.

"(B) Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah, and Wyoming.

"(C) Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota.

"(D) Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin.

"(E) Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia.

"(F) Delaware, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia.

"(G) Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, and Vermont.

"(3) REGIONAL MARKETING PERCENTAGE.—Not later than November 20 of each of the calendar years 1991 through 1998, the Secretary shall determine a regional marketing percentage for each region that is equal to the ratio of—

"(A) the total quantity of milk marketed in the region in the preceding 12 months; to

"(B) the total quantity of milk marketed in the United States in the preceding 12 months.

"(4) REGIONAL ALLOCATION OF ANNUAL REDUCTION.—The total reduction in the quantity of milk marketed for a region to be achieved under subsection (a) for a calendar year shall be equal to the product obtained by multiplying—

"(A) the amount of the national reduction in milk marketing, as determined under subsection (b) for that year; by

"(B) the regional marketing percentage for that region, as determined under paragraph (3) for that year.

"(5) ADJUSTMENT.—The Secretary may adjust the regional allocations made under paragraph (4) to take into consideration the regional supply and demand for fluid milk.

"(d) ELEMENTS OF REDUCTION CONTRACTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Beginning on January 1, 1992, the Secretary may begin making cash payments to each producer who enters into a surplus reduction contract under subsection (a) to reduce the quantity of milk marketed for commercial use during the period of the contract.

"(2) PAYMENTS TO PRODUCERS.—

"(A) BID OR OFFER RATE.—For purposes of payments under the surplus reduction program, the Secretary shall establish a rate per hundredweight for reduced quantities of milk marketed or solicit bids from producers who offer to enter into a surplus reduction contract. The rate established, or a bid accepted, by the Secretary may not be less than $5.50 per hundredweight nor more than $7.50 per hundredweight, unless the Secretary determines that a higher rate or bid is necessary for the successful operation of the program.

"(B) TIMING.—The Secretary shall make conditional whole or partial payments to participants in the surplus reduction program on at least a quarterly basis, or more frequently at the option of the Secretary.

"(C) ANNUAL SETTLEMENT PAYMENT.—If necessary, the Secretary shall make an annual settlement payment at the end of each year of the contract period, based on the total reduction in the quantity of milk marketed by the producer during the year.

"(D) TREATMENT OF PAYMENTS.—A payment made under a surplus reduction contract shall not be considered as any type of price support or payment for purposes of sections 1211 and 1221 of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3811 and 3821).

"(E) SOURCE OF FUNDS FOR PAYMENTS.—The Secretary shall make payments to producers under a surplus reduction contract from funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

"(3) PERIOD OF CONTRACT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The period of a surplus reduction contract shall be not less than 24 months and not more than 36 months, as determined by the agreement of the producer and the Secretary.

"(B) ONE-YEAR CONTRACTS.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the Secretary may offer to enter into surplus reduction contracts for a shorter period to permit the dairy industry to adjust to unforeseen changes in factors affecting milk production, prices, and the demand for milk products. In no case shall surplus reduction contracts be for a period of less than 12 months.

"(4) STAGGERED IMPLEMENTATION OF CONTRACTS.—In entering into surplus reduction contracts in each region specified in subsection (c), the Secretary shall vary the beginning dates and periods of the contracts, and announcements regarding the acceptance of the contracts, in order to ensure that an approximately equal number of dairy cattle will be sold for slaughter during each month of a calendar year as a result of the contracts.

"(5) ANNUAL LEVEL OF REDUCTION.—For each year of a surplus reduction contract with a producer, the amount of the reduction in the quantity of milk marketed for commercial use by the producer shall be equal to the product obtained by multiplying—

"(A) not less than 5 percent, nor more than 30 percent (as specified in the contract); by

"(B) the milk marketing history of the producer, as determined under subsection (e).

"(6) OTHER TERMS.—A surplus reduction contract may include such other terms and conditions as the Secretary considers to be necessary to ensure the success of the surplus reduction program.

"(e) ESTABLISHMENT OF MILK MARKETING HISTORY.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—To establish the milk marketing history of a producer for purposes of the annual reduction in milk marketings required under subsection (d)(5), the Secretary shall use, at the option of the producer, the quantity of milk that was marketed by the producer for commercial use—

"(A) during the period beginning on September 1, 1989, and ending on August 31, 1990; or

"(B) during the period beginning on September 1, 1990, and ending on August 31, 1991.

"(2) ADJUSTMENT.—The Secretary may adjust the milk marketing history of a producer established under paragraph (1) if the Secretary determines that—

"(A) the quantity of milk marketed by the producer during the periods referred to in paragraph (1) were unusually low in comparison to prior years; or

"(B) such adjustment is necessary to prevent extreme hardship.

"(3) RECORDS.—A producer who seeks to enter into a surplus reduction contract under subsection (a) shall provide the Secretary with such information to establish the milk marketing history of the producer as the Secretary may require. A producer who enters into a surplus reduction contract shall keep such records and make such reports as the Secretary determines necessary to carry out this section.

"(f) MODIFICATION AND ASSIGNMENT OF CONTRACTS.—

"(1) MODIFICATION.—In accordance with such rules and procedures as the Secretary may prescribe, the Secretary may modify surplus reduction contracts entered into under subsection (a) if the Secretary determines that there would be an excessive reduction in the level of milk production in the 48 contiguous States as a result of—

"(A) the success of the surplus reduction program; or

"(B) other factors affecting the quantity of milk marketed for commercial use.

"(2) ASSIGNMENT.—A producer may assign, with the approval of the Secretary, a surplus reduction contract (including the milk marketing history determined for that contract) to another person only if—

"(A) the producer's interest in the entire milk production facility and the entire dairy herd used by the producer to produce milk for commercial use is transferred as a unit to the assignee;

"(B) the producer and the assignee agree in writing that the assignee shall succeed to all rights and liabilities of the producer under the contract; and

"(C) a copy of the agreement is submitted to the Secretary before the transfer occurs.

"(3) SPECIAL RULES FOR DECEASED PRODUCERS.—A surplus reduction contract entered into by a producer who by reason of death cannot perform or assign the contract may be performed or assigned, in accordance with paragraph (2), by the estate of the producer.

"(g) COMPLIANCE WITH CONTRACTS.—

"(1) MONITORING BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall ensure compliance by producers with the contracted level of reductions in the quantity of milk marketed. The Secretary shall monitor on at least a quarterly basis the compliance of producers with surplus reduction contracts entered into under subsection (a).

"(2) UNUSED PRODUCTION CAPACITY.—Any production capacity of a facility that becomes available for use because a producer reduces milk production in order to comply with a surplus reduction contract shall not be used by the producer, or made available by the producer for use by any other person, for the production of milk.

"(3) LIMITATION ON TRANSFER OF DAIRY CATTLE.—

"(A) LIMITATION.—Any dairy cattle that would or could be used by the producer for the production of milk if the producer had not entered into and complied with a surplus reduction contract shall not be sold, leased, or otherwise transferred to another person during the period of such contract unless such cattle are sold for slaughter or sold or transferred to another producer with respect to whom there is in effect a surplus reduction contract.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—To the extent practicable and consistent with the goals of the surplus reduction program, the Secretary may permit the sale of registered, purebred cattle for breeding purposes subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe based on a history of such sales by the producer. The Secretary may also permit the sale or transfer of any dairy cattle if the Secretary determines that such sale or transfer does not adversely affect the purpose of the program.

"(h) VIOLATIONS OF SURPLUS REDUCTION CONTRACTS.—

"(1) REPAYMENT OF FUNDS AND BENEFITS RECEIVED.—If the Secretary determines that a producer has violated a surplus reduction contract entered into under subsection (a), the Secretary may require the producer to repay to the secretary all payments made under the contract and to make all payments that would have been required under section 204(h) during the period of the contract. The amount paid by the producer shall include interest calculated at the rate equal, to the extent practicable, to the cost to the Commodity Credit Corporation of borrowings from the United States Treasury for the relevant time period. A violation of the contract shall not relieve the producer from continued compliance with the obligations of the contract.

"(2) TYPES OF VIOLATIONS.—A producer who enters into a surplus reduction contract shall be liable to the Secretary for marketing penalties under paragraph (3), in addition to other remedies available under this section, if the producer—

"(A) fails to make the required reduction in milk marketing;

"(B) retains or acquires an interest in dairy cattle or the production of milk in violation of the contract;

"(C) makes a false statement regarding the milk marketing history of the producer;

"(D) makes a false statement regarding the amount of the reduction in milk marketing achieved under the contract; or

"(E) fails to meet such other terms and conditions of the contract, as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(3) PENALTIES.—The amount of a marketing penalty shall be an amount determined by the Secretary that is the higher of—

"(A) $5,000 for the violation; or

"(B) the quantity of milk involved in the violation multiplied by the support price in effect under section 204(b).

"(4) EXCEPTION.—The Secretary may waive penalties under paragraph (3) for a violation that is the result of inadvertent errors in the reduction of milk marketing, as determined by the Secretary, except that the amount of a wavier may not exceed 5 percent of the quantity of the reduction in annual milk marketing by the producer provided for under the contract.

"(i) USE OF GOVERNMENT RESOURCES.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary may—

"(1) use the services of State and county committees established under section 8(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590(b)); and

"(2) enter into agreements to use, on a reimbursable basis, the services of administrators of the Federal milk marketing orders and State milk marketing programs.

"(j) REDUCTION IN PRICE RECEIVED BY PRODUCERS.—

"(1) REDUCTION REQUIRED; PURPOSE.—The Secretary shall provide for a reduction in the price received by producers for all milk produced in the 48 contiguous States and marketed by producers for commercial use. The reduction in price is required to fund the surplus reduction program under this section, the price support program under section 204 (including expenses of the Board under subsection (g)), the program for red meat purchases under section 204B, and the dairy cattle export program under section 154 of the Food Security Act of 1985.

"(2) PERIOD OF REDUCTION.—The reduction in price required by this subsection shall be made during the period beginning on January 1, 1992, and ending on December 31, 1998, and shall be in addition to any reduction in price required under section 204(h).

"(k) RATE OF REDUCTION.—

"(1) 1992 THROUGH 1995.—During each of the calendar years 1992 through 1995, the Secretary shall establish the rate of reduction under subsection (j)(1) in the price received by producers at an amount such that the total amount collected under that subsection is equal to the difference between—

"(A) the projected cost for that calendar year of the programs referred to in subsection (j)(1) or otherwise authorized by the amendments made by the Dairy Production Stabilization Act of 1991 and of the dairy termination program; and

"(B) the following amounts:

"(i) In fiscal year 1992, $391,958,000.

"(ii) In fiscal year 1993, $465,961,000.

"(iii) In fiscal year 1994, $469,537,000.

"(iv) In fiscal year 1995, $487,057,000.

"(v) For the first three months of fiscal year 1996, the projected outlays for such months if those programs are operated so that the projected outlays for the entire fiscal year are equal to $533,596,000.

"(2) 1996 THROUGH 1998.—During each of the calendar years 1996 through 1998, the Secretary shall establish the rate of the reduction under subsection (j)(1) in the price received by producers at an amount equal to the rate established under paragraph (1) for calendar year 1995.

"(3) ADJUSTMENTS FOR EXCESS COLLECTIONS.—the Secretary shall adjust the rate of reduction established under this subsection for a calendar year to reflect any excess in the total amount collected under this subsection for the preceding calendar year.".

(b) EXCEPTION FROM RECONCILIATION PRICE REDUCTION FOR PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS.—Subsection (h) of section 204 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446e) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) EXCEPTION FOR PRODUCERS PARTICIPATING IN SURPLUS REDUCTION PROGRAM.—A producer who is subject to a surplus reduction contract under section 204A(a) and who would be eligible for a refund under paragraph (3) (as determined by the Secretary) shall not be subject to the reduction in price required to be made under this subsection on milk subject to that contract and marketed during the period of that contract.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Such section is further amended—

(1) in subsection (h)(1) (as amended by section 4(g)), by striking "subsection (g)" and inserting "section 204A(j)"; and

(2) in subsection (i), by striking "subsection (g) or (h)" each place it appears and inserting "subsection (h) or section 204A(j)".

"(b) PREVENTION OF ADVERSE EFFECTS.—

"(1) OPERATION.—This subsection shall apply for calendar years in which the surplus reduction program under section 204A is in effect.

"(2) EFFORTS TO PREVENT ADVERSE EFFECTS.—If the Secretary estimates under subsection (a) that the total number of dairy cattle to be marketed for slaughter during a calendar year will exceed the average annual number of dairy cattle culled during calendar years 1988 through 1991, the Secretary shall take such steps as may be necessary to completely offset the adverse effect on producers of red meat of reductions in the price of red meat caused by the excess marketing of dairy cattle as a result of the surplus reduction program. Such steps may include—

"(A) purchasing and distributing red meat in addition to those quantities normally purchased and distributed by the Secretary; and

"(B) supporting the export of live dairy cattle through the dairy cattle export program established under section 154 of the Food Security Act of 1985.

(b) AMENDMENT OF MILK MARKETING ORDERS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall publish an amendment to each milk marketing order issued pursuant to section 8c of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608c), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, to implement subsection (5)(H) of such section (as added by subsection (a)). The Secretary of Agriculture shall not conduct a referendum under paragraphs (8), (9), and (19) of such section among producers or a polling of processors regarding the amendment. The amendment of an order under this subsection shall take effect on the first day of the first calendar month beginning after the end of the one-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) APPLICATION TO STATE MILK MARKETING ORDERS.—The requirements of section 8c(5)(H) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 608c), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 (as added by subsection (a)), shall apply with regard to comparable milk marketed under State milk marketing orders on and after the effective date specified in subsection (b).

SUPPORT FOR THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

Friday, November 8, 1991

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, beginning with the successes of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in the 1950's and 1960's, America has been on the road to improving civil rights protections for all its citizens. The Voting Rights Act, the Civil Rights Act, and Americans With Disabilities Act all ensured that race, creed, color—or any other factor—could not be used to discriminate against an individual.

Over the course of the 1980's there have been a number of legal challenges that have attempted to change the composition of employer-employee relations. The Supreme Court over that period of time issued decisions that effectively made it the responsibility of the employee to establish and prove transgressions by the employer.

Compromises have been crafted for a number of years that have failed to pass both Houses of Congress. Recent legislation, however, has passed both the House and the Senate by wide margins, but was vetoed by President Bush.

In the past few months, President Bush has conceded on many of the major controversial points after it appeared that the legislation might have enough support in the Congress to override his veto. The House and Senate have now passed the legislation which reinforces the employment protection that existed in the 1970's and specifies new protection for women, religious groups, and the disabled.

Among other matters, these provisions will: Make it clear that discrimination at all phases of employment is covered by law; force discriminatory employers to justify practices that adversely affect women and minorities; prevent employers from avoiding liability in all cases of intentional discrimination; provide the same legal protections for citizens working abroad for American companies; and allow proven victims of employment discrimination to seek compensation for their court costs. Finally, this act will provide for new punitive damages against intentional discrimination of women, religious groups, and the disabled. At the same time, this bill understands that the nature of the economy is such that overly burdensome regulations will have only a crippling effect on businesses and macroeconomics growth.

America's civil rights laws have been a symbol of this Nation's beliefs of fairness and equity. We need to continue to mold honest and fair laws that protect employees against discrimination without forcing businesses to close their doors because of undue Federal intervention. The bill before us today is a fair compromise, and I urge its adoption.

NATIONAL BIBLE WEEK

HON. CHARLES W. STENHOLM

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues both to personally observe and to bring to the attention of their constituents National Bible Week, which is scheduled for November 24–December 1, 1991.

The great religious reformer and theologian Martin Luther once explained that he had so much work to accomplish in a given day that if he didn't spend the first 4 hours of each day in prayer and Bible reading, there was no way he would get it all done. While we wouldn't claim to have the piety or wisdom of Luther, those of us who regularly attend the Members' prayer breakfast have the same sense of the importance of the Bible. If we didn't take that time for fellowship and Bible study each week, there is no way we would have the guidance to accomplish the tasks before us here in the House of Representatives.

Many times I have marveled at the foresight and wisdom of our Nation's forefathers in drafting a document, the U.S. Constitution, which 200 years later remains a guiding force for our country. How much more marvelous it is that a book whose chapters were written 1,900 to 3,500 years ago has remained the spiritual light for generations ever since and in every nation.

The Bible is an amazing history book, contains great poetry, is filled with action-packed adventures, provides fascinating biographies about the most pure and the most evil of humans, includes amazingly contemporary psychological understanding, and even relates moments of humor. But if it were these things alone, it never would have endured in the way it has.

What distinguishes the Holy Bible is that it is exactly that: Holy. God is the author of scripture. Through the Holy Spirit, God directed the thoughts and the very words that the various human writers from Moses to John wrote. Through the Bible, we learn that God is holy, just, all-powerful, all-knowing, and the sovereign ruler of the universe, but most of all, we learn of God's grace. Through the additional illumination which Jesus Christ brings to the world, we learn even more about how God supports, guides, and empowers all people who look to Him as their foundation throughout life. While other books may instruct and inspire us, none can provide us the guidance provided by the Holy Bible.

This 51st annual observance of National Bible Week will continue in the nonsectarian, grassroot tradition of all previous celebrations. The group sponsoring this event, the Interfaith Laymen's National Bible Association, was formed in 1940 by a small group of business and professional men who sought to encourage Americans to appreciate our Nation's religious heritage. Since its beginning, this week has involved people from a broad range of faiths, with local observances occurring in thousands of communities all across the land. This year, I am proud to join Senator CHARLES GRASSLEY of Iowa as the congressional cochairmen of the event.

As we designate this 1 week to bring special attention to the Bible, I urge my colleagues to take this opportunity to remember the guidance which is available to them through this Good Book, encouraging their constituents to do the same. Even more important, I hope that this National Bible Week will serve to instigate and renew regular Bible reading by Americans across this land who are seeking wisdom and support as they live their lives.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF MAJ. GEN. DONALD M. LIONETTI

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Maj. Gen. Donald M. Lionetti who is being transferred from his post as Commanding General of the Army Air Defense Artillery Center and School at Fort Bliss, TX, to the Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, VA. While at Fort Bliss Major General Lionetti became an important part of the greater west Texas community.

Major General Lionetti will leave for his new assignment at TRADOC just 2 years after he became the commander of Fort Bliss in November 1989. He has been quoted in the El Paso media as saying that his assignment at Fort Bliss has been a pinnacle of 30 years of service. Those of us in El Paso also agree that his assignment has been a pinnacle, a pinnacle in the relationship between the Army Post and the west Texas community.

Major General Lionetti has served his country, and the Army, well. He was commissioned from the U.S. Military Academy in 1961 and has line experience in NIKE Hercules, service with the U.S. Air Force at a NORAD Control Center, warhead support for a German Armored Division, battery command in Vietnam, and service as chief of plans of a corps artillery headquarters.

Most recently, Major General Lionetti served as director of plans, U.S. Space Command, Peterson Air Force Base, CO. Other key assignments for Major General Lionetti included deputy commanding general, U.S. Army Air Defense Artillery School, Fort Bliss; chief of the Sgt. York Air Defense System Intensive Management Team, and later as chief of the Firepower Division, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans, U.S. Army, Washington DC; Deputy Chief of the High Technology Test Bed and commander of the Division Air Defense Artillery, both assignments with the 9th Infantry Division (Motorized) at Fort Lewis.

At his new post, Major General Lionetti will continue to serve the United States as the deputy commanding general and chief of staff of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, VA.

While the residents of the 16th Congressional District of Texas wish Major General Lionetti well in his new position, it is with mixed feelings. Major General Lionetti has been an active participant in community events, sharing the battles of Operation Desert Shield/Desert Storm with the residents of El Paso, who returned the support throughout the 10 months military personnel were stationed in the Persian Gulf.

Major General Lionetti invited the community to share in the victories of Operation Desert Storm and, in return, the community invited Fort Bliss dependents into their hearts and homes.

I share the mixed emotions of my constituents; watching Major General Lionetti expand his professional skills and opportunities, I feel as though I am losing a friend at home.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the residents of the 16th Congressional District of Texas, I wish good luck and Godspeed to a good friend and a great west Texan and American.

A TRIBUTE TO ALVARO SOLIS

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, it is my wish to acknowledge the 1-year anniversary of the death of Alvaro Solis, Jr., a former constituent of my congressional district. Alvaro was killed on October 27, 1990, during an attempted robbery in South Dade.

On the date of the 1-year anniversary of his death, Alvaro's family along with the community of Florida International University, where Alvaro was a junior pursuing a degree in finance, held a vigil in remembrance of this fine student and member of our community.

The ceremony was coordinated by the members of his fraternity, the Florida Nu chapter of Sigma Phi Epsilon, and attended by more than 400 people. Among the special guests and speakers were Alvaro Solis, Sr., Dr. Mitch Maidique, president of the FIU; Dr. Richard Correnti, vice president for student affairs; and Mr. Al Osborne, president of Lock 'Em Up, Florida.

During the ceremony, members of the community planted an allspice tree in his name, and a photograph of Alvaro was set by the newly planted tree. Long stemmed red roses and white carnation boutonnieres, given to the guests by members of the fraternity, were carefully set beside his photograph decorating the allspice.

Alvaro Solis, Sr., and his family have dedicated their time to working with an organization called Lock 'Em Up, Florida, whose members are committed to keeping convicted criminals off the streets throughout the cities of this State.

Again, I wish to acknowledge Alvaro's friends and family for the beautiful ceremony that was held in his honor, and I commend them for the stand that they have taken against the perpetrators of such crimes as the one that took Alvaro's life. I'm certain that he is sorely missed by all who knew him.

A SALUTE TO OUR VETERANS

HON. JAMES M. INHOFE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. Speaker, I come before this House today in order to honor, and express my deep gratitude, to all the men and women who have proudly served this great country as members of our Armed Forces.

As you know, we pay tribute to this Nation's veterans each November. However, I must contend that we should be honoring them throughout the year, not just on one particular day. The commitment they made to this country is unparalleled, therefore we must fight to see that our commitment to them does not get cast aside. With all of the reductions in spending we must not take lightly the needs of those heroes who placed their country's interests above their own. Because of their courage, we enjoy more personal freedoms in the United States than any other country.

Not long ago, I witnessed over 1,100 of my constituents proudly answer the call to duty during the Persian Gulf war. I would especially like to thank them, and the 67,790 other wartime veterans in Oklahoma's First District for putting there lives on hold, leaving family and friends, to serve their country. I hope that you will join me today and every day, in honoring those brave individuals and remembering their commitment to these United States.

As the old military saying goes: It wasn't always easy, it wasn't always fair, but when our country needed us, we were always there. Mr. Speaker, let's make sure that we are there for them.

TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL J. BOOTH

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Michael J. Booth, the editor of the Atlanticville newspaper in Long Branch, NJ. On Wednesday, November 13, 1991, Mr. Booth will be honored by the Long Branch Chamber of Commerce, and this occasion offers an opportunity to recognize the great contribution that Mike has made to the community.

Mike Booth has been a long-time acquantance—usually a friend, sometimes a friendly adversary, but always someone who can be counted on to take a deep, abiding, active, and very vocal concern for the unique and wonderful city of Long Branch that we both have called home for all of our lives.

Mike Booth was born in Long Branch in 1948 and graduated from Long Branch High School in 1967. He studied journalism and photography at Brookdale College in Monmouth County. He started the Atlanticville in 1976 to help America celebrate her 200th birthday. The paper started as a biweekly and became a weekly in 1979. With its offices in downtown Long Branch, the paper is now the shore area's news weekly.

Mike and his wife Shannon have four sons: David, 13, Shawn, 12, Paul, 10, and Charlie, 8.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that all of us in public office recognize that a free and energetic press plays an indispensable role in keeping the public engaged in the affairs of politics and government. While there may be times when we disagree with the way a particular issue is presented, and times when we are the subject of a certain amount of criticism, newspapers and other forms of media are integral to an informed and concerned populace. In his efforts to chronicle the political, social, cultural, and other events in Long Branch and the surrounding communities, Mike Booth has lived up to his vital responsibility to the great benefit of his readers.

LOCKHEED OF MARIETTA 40TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 8, 1991

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, one of the Nation's giants in the aerospace industry is the Lockheed Corp., a California-based firm. The company very wisely decided 40 years ago to locate an aircraft manufacturing plant in Marietta, GA, which is now in my congressional district.

Now the home of the entire Lockheed Aeronautical Systems Co., the Georgia plant was honored on its 40th anniversary October 31 with a luncheon at the Northwest Marriott Hotel, given by the Public and Business Affairs Committee of the Marietta Kiwanis Club.

Cochairing the event, attended by more than 400 persons, were Kiwanians Bob Spratlin and Bill Kinney, whose very capable efforts made it the special occasion warranted by such a milestone as a 40th anniversary.

Members of the Kiwanis committee included Walter Kelly, Jr.; Jack Crowder; State Senator Chuck Clay; Harold Willingham; Marietta Mayor Joe Mack Wilson; Knox Wood; Otis A. Brumby; Ed Milligan; Judge Harris Hines; Lockheed President Kenneth Cannestra; State Representative Jack Vaughan; Jack Wilson; Cobb County Commission Chairman Phil Secrest; Craig Aronoff; Ed Andrews; Wyman Pilcher III; and Roy Barnes, the Kiwanis Public Affairs Committee chairman.

I rise to commend Mr. Spratlin and Mr. Kinney in particular for their efforts to make the appreciation day a truly great event. I wish I could have been there.
